Police cover-up

Execution Authorities had attempted to blame Albert Ojwang for injuries that caused his death in their custody. But while his tormentors have succeeded in silencing the vocal teacher forever, they could not hide the truth about the cause of his sudden death — brutal torture. In April this year, Albert Ojwang formally introduced his wife Nevinina Onyango to his family in Kakoth village, Homa Bay County. The young couple settled in Ojwang's simba, a traditional Luo bachelor's house he had built beside the gate within his parents' compound. According to Luo customs, constructing a simba signifies a young man's readiness to support a wife and start a family. Nevinina says her husband had big plans for his family. Last Saturday, Ojwang had just returned from buying tree seedlings to plant around his house that was also undergoing renovations. The father of one was seated with his wife who had served him a meal when six police officers stormed the compound... And ruined their lives.

Murder While police station officers have been interdicted, the DCI detectives who arrested him remain unknown

Police cover-up of teacher's death exposed amid queries on names of arresting officers

Postmortem report exposes police lie that Ojwang hit his head on a cell wall, and finds that he was assaulted and tortured to death

BY DANIEL OGETTA

An attempt by the police to cover up how a teacher died in custody has unravelled after a postmortem examination yesterday exposed he was tortured to death.

The initial lie by the police that Albert Ojwang hit his head on a cell wall — in an attempt to weave a narrative of suicide — collapsed spectacularly after pathologists found gruesome injuries “consistent with external assault”.

Ojwang had been arrested from his rural home in Homa Bay on Saturday, following a complaint against him by Deputy Inspector General of Police Eliud Lagat, and locked up at Nairobi's Central Police Station only to be reported dead hours later.

National Police Service spokesperson Muchiri Nyaga on Sunday initially sought to explain the death of the teacher-cum-blogger, saying: “The suspect sustained head injuries after hitting his head against the cell wall.”

But the postmortem examination conducted at the city mortuary concluded the cause of death was head injury and blunt trauma, with pathologists ruling out self-inflicted injuries.

Ojwang's body bore multiple signs of physical abuse, including bruises on the torso, face and limbs. His head was severely deformed, and blood was seen oozing from his nose. The autopsy revealed he had signs of torture, with injuries that were not self-inflicted.

Speaking after the postmortem examination, lead pathologist Dr Bernard Midira said the team, which included five pathologists representing all parties among them the Independent Policing Oversight Authority (IPOA) and civil society groups — had reached a consensus on the cause of death.

“We found serious injuries to the head, signs of neck compression, and multiple soft tissue injuries on the limbs,” said Dr Midira. “These injuries are consistent with external assault. There were also signs of a struggle.”

If indeed he died of “sustained head injuries after hitting his head against the cell wall,” as the police claimed then, Dr Midira said, as an expert and having examined the body, the patterns of the bleeding would have pointed to that direction.

“But the bleeds that we found on the scalp and on the skin of the head were partially spread on all aspects including the face, the sides of the head and also the back of the head. When we tie that up together with other injuries that are well spread in the body, including the upper limbs under the trunk, then this is unlikely to be self-inflicted injury,” he concluded.

“There was frontal bleeding in the brain, though the bleed was partially spread. This is unlikely to be self-inflicted,” Dr Midira said.

Dr Midira added that while the exact timeline of the injuries was difficult to determine, they occurred within a short span.

Ojwang's father, Mr Meshack Ojwang, said the police had lied to him about the cause of his son's death, adding that going by the findings of the autopsy and the injuries on the torso, it could have been a well-crafted cover-up.

“Kuhusiana ripoti ambayo nilipata kwa polisi, ni kwamba ilikuwa ya uongo kutokana na uchunguzi ya leo. Niliambiwa mtoto wangu alijigonga kwa ukuta,” a teary Mr Ojwang said, calling on President William Ruto to intervene.

“Help me as a taxpayer. They saw our home was humble and assumed we didn't matter.”

And in a heart-wrenching plea, he directly addressed the complainant, Mr Lagat.

“Eliud Lagat, were you the one who sent your people? What did he do to deserve this? Why was my child crucified?” he asked.

The initial official report by the police indicated that Ojwang was lawfully arrested by Directorate of Criminal Investigations (DCI) detectives for false publication and placed in custody.

But the identities of the four DCI detectives who seized him from his home at Kasipul Kabondo and drove with him to Nairobi where he was locked up at Central Police Station have not been revealed.

As at yesterday, only six police officers stationed at Central Police Station had been interdicted. An investigation by IPOA is expected to shed light on when Ojwang was assaulted and by whom.

Records at the mortuary indicate that Ojwang was booked at the facility at 0244hrs and that he was brought in by police from Central Police Station. The cause of death was indicated as sudden. Ojwang's body was driven in a vehicle with a number plate GK764Y, show the records. The officer who brought him is indicated as “CPC” of E/N 69276.

Law Society of Kenya (LSK) president Faith Odhiambo described the injuries as consistent with torture, accusing the perpetrators of extrajudicial execution.

“This is a crime. Someone gave the order to pick him up from Homa Bay. Someone must be held to account,” said Ms Odhiambo. “We will continue to pile pressure until every single officer involved is held personally liable. IPOA must act. We won't accept any excuses.”

“We want all those officers held responsible. From the one who issued orders, the one who picked him up to the ones he was handed over to,” Ms Odhiambo added.

The family's lawyer, Mr Vincent Vusugwa, questioned how Ojwang allegedly removed his clothing, including his pullover, in a locked cell, as claimed in earlier police reports.

“Which is the OB number? Who was the investigating officer? Who ordered the detectives to travel all the way to Homa Bay to arrest Ojwang?” Mr Vusugwa wondered.

“This case raises more questions than answers,” he said, adding: “The Deputy Inspector General is listed as the complainant. But where did he file the complaint, and who gave the orders?”

Ojwang was arrested on Saturday from his father's home in Kasipul Kabondo, Homa Bay County, reportedly over a social media post deemed “derogatory” to Mr Lagat.

Less than 24 hours later, his lifeless body was lying at the Nairobi Funeral Home, bruised, bloodied, and swollen — hundreds of kilometres from where he was last seen alive by his family.

The death was recorded under OB number 09/8/06/2025, with officers claiming he was rushed to Mbagathi Hospital where he was pronounced dead on arrival.

Raila: Ojwang's death erodes State, police credibility

BY JUSTUS OCHIENG

The leader of the Orange Democratic Movement (ODM), Raila Odinga, has condemned the death of Albert Ojwang, a teacher and blogger from Voi, while in police custody. He described this as an erosion of the “authority and credibility of the police and the State”.

Mr Odinga said that it was unfortunate that Mr Ojwang joins the “horrible” long list of young and defenceless Kenyans whose lives have been cut short in brutal and senseless circumstances at the hands of the police.

“While these deaths cause tremendous pain to individuals and their families, they seriously erode the authority and credibility of the police and the State; and that is a significant step towards chaos and collapse,” the ODM leader warned in a statement from Bangkok, Thailand.

“Nobody knows who gave the orders for Mr Ojwang to be arrested and ferried all the way to Nairobi — and yet that person should be answering to Kenyans,” said Mr Odinga.

Calling for immediate and credible investigations, the opposition leader said that the incident was not isolated but part of a disturbing pattern of police brutality against defenceless Kenyans.

Lawmakers warn Ipoa over Ojwang murder investigation

BY COLLINS OMULO AND SAMWEL OWINO

MPs are demanding that external investigators be brought in to investigate the brutal killing of social media influencer Albert Ojwang, as they lack confidence in the Independent Policing and Oversight Authority (Ipoa).

The outraged legislators said they will not allow cover ups and will stop at nothing until individuals involved in the death of the 31-year-old are brought to book.

From the Senate to the National Assembly, lawmakers maintained that heads must roll as they called for an overhaul of the entire security apparatus amid rising cases of abductions and extrajudicial killings.

This as Senate Speaker Amason Kingi ordered that Inspector-General of Police Douglas Kanja, Ipoa chairperson Isack Hassan and National Police Service Commission chairperson Eliud Kinuthia appear before the Senate today accompanied by Interior Cabinet Secretary Kipchumba Murkomen for questioning.

Senate Majority Leader Aaron Cheruiyot said Ipoa lacks the independence to investigate the incident, arguing that it cannot do its job without interference.

"Last month, they (Ipoa) told us they are investigating those who killed people in Ang'ata Barakoi and up to date, we still don't know the people," said the Kericho Senator. "How difficult is it to know who are the officers who went for Albert in Homa Bay yet when it was one of us who was killed, we were being given a blow-by-blow explanation of the investigations?"

Migori Senator Eddy Oketch said Mr Ojwang's tragic death raises serious questions about police brutality, abuse of authority and the lack of immediate accountability by the responsible officers.

Suba North MP Millie Odhiambo addresses journalists at Bunge Tower on Monday over the killing of Albert Ojwang. She is among lawmakers who yesterday called for external investigators to probe the killing. DENNIS ONSONGOI NATION sponsible officers.

National Assembly Minority Whip Millie Odhiambo said: "To show seriousness, this case should be fast-tracked. If Ipoa is not in a position to, occasionally the government has employed the services of an external investigator. For us to have confidence, the government should consider that."

Tharaka MP George Murugara said there is need to review the training of police officers, saying the country has no room for extra-judicial killings.

"Are there senior officers giving instructions to junior officers to kill our young men?" he asked.

Homa Bay Senator Moses Kariuki described the death of Ojwang as a shameful act and Mr Murkomen should have resigned in a working democracy. Nominated Senator Esther Okenyuri added: "DCI officers who arrested Mr Ojwang should tell us the people who sent them to arrest the man and who killed him. This is not something normal."

Vihiga Senator Godfrey Osofi said that senior police officers must step aside or be fired by President William Ruto.

"As ODM, we signed an MoU with UDA and one of the things was a stop to abductions and extrajudicial killings and we will consider this as a material breach of the agreement. We want to see action from the government on deputy IG Eliud Lagat. He should not be in office as we speak. Let us not hoodwink Kenyans by going for junior officers," he said.

His Murang'a counterpart Joe Nyutu said: "There is no reason why Mr Ojwang had to be transported to Nairobi on a civil matter of defamation. Langat should have sued for damages."

Kakamega Senator Boni Khalwe said it "is not enough to tell Mr Lagat to resign, he should be arrested and record a statement".

Widow: My husband had big plans for family, community

Ms Onyango says he had planned to transform his community through agriculture

BY GEORGE ODIWUOR

In April, Albert Ojwang formally introduced his wife Nevinina Onyango to his family in Kakoth village, Homa Bay County.

The couple was warmly welcomed by both the family and the wider community. They settled in Ojwang's simba, a traditional Luo bachelor's house he had built within his parents' compound.

Upon marriage, the simba traditionally becomes the couple's first home, a practice Ojwang honoured by renovating the structure to welcome his bride.

He had constructed the house more than a year earlier while working as a teacher contracted by the Board of Management at a school in Voi in Taita-Taveta County. When he returned home in April, he began refurbishing the building by plastering walls, repainting and upgrading fittings. At the time of his arrest last Saturday, Ojwang had just returned from buying tree seedlings to beautify the compound.

The father of one was seated outside sharing a quiet moment with his wife who had just served him a meal of vegetables harvested from their farm when six police officers arrived on three motorcycles. Without explanation, they asked him to accompany them.

Ojwang was admired in his village not only for his dedication to farming, but also for being a role model to local youth. His passion for agriculture and community development had made him a beacon of hope.

According to Ms Onyango, her husband had created a seedbed next to their house for vegetable seedlings. She said he dreamed of feeding families, creating economic opportunities and inspiring others through farming.

Ms Onyango, a nursing student at Thika School of Medical Sciences who is due to graduate later this year, described her late husband as visionary.

"He came back home with a plan. The seedbed was just the beginning," she said.

Village elder Benson Ojweke, who had known Ojwang for years, praised both him and his now widow.

"She's still new here but has already started taking part in communal activities," Mr Ojweke said. "Many young people have abandoned farming for quick but unfruitful ventures. Ojwang was different. His commitment to agriculture proved his industrious spirit. Though his project was still young, it held the promise of transforming lives."

Raised in humble circumstances, Ojwang's academic journey took him to Pwani University in Kilifi County where he graduated in 2022, an achievement that inspired many schoolchildren in his village.

"His success gave our children hope. He had the potential to uplift this entire community," Mr Ojweke said.

An only child, Ojwang supported his parents and wife with the little income he earned. His uncle Joseph Okumu recalled how he had already gathered bricks to construct a permanent home for his parents.

"He wanted to build for them before thinking of his own house," Mr Okumu said.

Ojwang's mother, Eucabeth Adhiambo Ojwang, tearfully said: "He would call nearly every day, asking if we were okay especially if his father had eaten," she said.

She said the family agreed to let him go with the police officers to Nairobi believing he would return after any legal proceedings. But that hope was crushed.

"Even if he had been jailed for life, I could have visited him. No one deserves to die like that," she said. "I braved countless cold nights so he could go to school. That he should die like this is unspeakably cruel."

71,000 student loan defaulters blacklisted as HELB owed Sh35bn

Amount owed can fund education of 289,000 students for an academic year

BY DAVID MUCHUNGUH

Some 310,942 former students who benefited from funding for their education by the Higher Education Loans Board (HELB) have defaulted on loan repayments totalling Sh35.14 billion, it has been revealed.

Of these, 71,806 have already been negatively listed with Metropol and TransUnion credit reference bureaus (CRBs), potentially locking them out of access to credit facilities. However, 412,194 other individuals have been repaying their loans have been listed positively for performing loans.

According to HELB chief executive Geoffrey Monari, the amount owed is enough to fund the education of 289,000 students in universities and colleges for a full academic year. The board awards study loans to deserving students for their upkeep as well as part of their tuition fees. Upon maturity, the loans are payable at an interest rate of four per cent.

The details of the defaulters come at a time the government is struggling to finance students in higher education as their numbers increase and Exchequer funding remains static. In the 2024/25 financial year, Sh35.9 billion had been budgeted for student loans through HELB.

Data from previous years indicates that the number of defaulters has been on a steady increase, which threatens the sustainability of HELB, which was conceptualised as a revolving fund.

Some 11,117 students whose university education was funded by the government between 1975 and 1994 before HELB was created owe Sh682.28 million.

Mr Monari revealed that the current total outstanding balance stands at Sh101.4 billion from 774,092 loan accounts of former beneficiaries.

"If all debtors paid their dues, HELB would reduce reliance on the National Treasury funding. It would expand access to higher education and institutional credibility would be strengthened," Mr Monari said.

He added that 463,150 former students holding Sh66.26 billion in mature loans are currently repaying on a monthly basis.

President William Ruto had promised to "Restructure the Higher Education Loans Board (HELB) to offer interest free loans," in the Education Charter he signed with stakeholders during his campaigns for the presidency in 2022. Close to three years since coming to office, this has not been actualised.

Mr Monari told the Nation that a key challenge that HELB faces in its debt collection is a misconception that HELB loans are social or non-repayable. He also blamed high unemployment rates for inability of former students to repay their student loans.

Other reasons he cited are a rise in short-term and 'gig' employment that is difficult to track and migration of graduates to the diaspora.

"HELB uses a multi-pronged approach to debt collection. This includes statutory employer check-off system and strategic partnerships and data-sharing with institutions," Mr Monari said.

Loanees are also sent periodic reminders and penalty waivers extended for lump sum payments. The board also engages loan guarantors to convince the loanees to repay their loans.

Mr Monari ruled out the possibility of writing off some of the loans, saying that it is beyond the mandate of HELB.

"The decision to write off loans lies with the National Treasury through the Ministry of Education, not HELB," he stated.

Shocking The revelations, which impact management of capitation funds, came as audit flagged the ownership of Nemis

Why State may not know the exact number of learners

The management system was manipulated with some learners' details erased, MPs told

BY DAVID MWERE

The government may not know the exact number of learners in public and private schools following revelations that the National Education Management Information System (Nemis), which the Ministry of Education has been using to capture learner data, was manipulated, with some records erased.

The revelations, which impact the management of capitation funds in schools, emerged as Auditor-General Nancy Gathungu flagged the ownership of Nemis in her audit report on the accounts of the State Department for Basic Education for the 2022/23 financial year. The report is currently under consideration by the Public Accounts Committee (PAC) of the National Assembly.

Although Basic Education Principal Secretary Julius Bitok, while appearing before PAC, claimed that 12.6 million is the current number of learners in primary, junior, and secondary schools, disclosures by Mr Fredrick Mujumba, a senior official at the State Department for Basic Education, suggest otherwise.

Mr Mujumba, who heads the Kenya Education Management Information System (Kemis), the platform replacing Nemis, told the committee, chaired by Butere MP Tindi Mwale, that the deletion of learner data from the system may have compromised the accuracy of records.

"We have noticed that some of these learners have been deleted from various points - not necessarily at the school level. In some cases, a cybercafé operator removed learners from the system because they had not been paid for the work they did," Mr Mujumba told the committee.

The weaknesses in the Nemis system were highlighted by the Auditor-General, as it emerged the scope of work for strengthening Nemis included the installation of one of the servers at a secondary site on existing government cloud infrastructure. This was to enable the system to leverage government cloud resources such as processing and storage capabilities, load balancing, intelligent system monitoring, scalability, data security, and business continuity. The secondary site runs on VMware virtualisation software and CISCO or DELL servers.

Bitok assured MPs that the government has accurate learner data, even as PAC members raised doubts and called for an audit.

"We know the number of learners because we have them," said the PS, adding that the migration to Kemis was informed by recommendations of the Presidential Working Party on Education Reforms, chaired by Prof Raphael Munavu.

The PS, however, did not disclose how much the migration to the new system would cost, despite pressure from PAC members. He went on to state that the 12.6 million learners are distributed as follows: 6.4 million in primary schools, 3.3 million in senior secondary schools, and 2.9 million in Junior Secondary Schools.

Mr Mujumba's remarks followed concerns raised by PAC members Dr Wilberforce Ojiambo (Funyula) and Nabii Nabwera

We have noticed that some of these learners have been deleted from various points... In some cases, a cybercafé operator removed learners from the system

Fredrick Mujumba

(Lugari), who questioned the integrity of the learner data held by the Ministry of Education.

"The State Department does not know the number of learners in schools across the country," said Dr Ojiambo. Mr Nabwera added, "Manipulation of Nemis is the greatest threat to capitation management. It has become a channel for the siphoning of funds. Principals have reported that by the end of the day, a school may have 300 learners recorded in the system, only for the number to drop to 100 the next morning."

This is despite the fact that the government allocates and disburses capitation funds to public schools based on learner data captured in Nemis.

CAUTIONARY ANNOUNCEMENT

SANLAM KENYA PLC

(Incorporated in Kenya under the Companies Act)(Chapter 486 of the Laws of Kenya)
Company Number 10/46

The Capital Markets Act (Chapter 485A of the Laws of Kenya)

Regulation 89(4) of the Capital Markets (Securities) (Public Offers, Listing and Disclosures) Regulations, 2023

Proposed indirect increase of shareholding in Sanlam Kenya PLC by Hubris Holdings Limited and Sanlam Allianz Africa Proprietary Limited and notice of intention not to make a mandatory take-over offer to the shareholders of Sanlam Kenya PLC

Shareholders of Sanlam Kenya PLC (Sanlam Kenya) are hereby advised that on 5 June 2025, Sanlam Kenya was served with a notice of intention not to make a mandatory take-over offer to the shareholders of Sanlam Kenya (the Notice) by Hubris Holdings Limited, a limited liability company incorporated in Kenya under company number C. 87555 and having its registered address at Sanlam Tower, L.R. No. 180/V/72 and of PO Box 44041, GPO Nairobi, Kenya (Hubris) and Sanlam Allianz Africa Proprietary Limited (SAZ), a limited liability company established in the Republic of South Africa and registered under company number 2021/987585/07, having its registered address at 2 Strand Road, Sanlamhof, Cape Town, South Africa, 7532. Hubris is a wholly owned subsidiary of SAZ.

According to the Notice, resulting from the recently concluded Sanlam Kenya rights issue to raise KES 2.5 billion through the issuance of 500,000,000 new Sanlam Kenya ordinary shares at an offer price of KES 5 in the ratio of 125 new ordinary shares for every 36 ordinary shares held in the share capital of Sanlam Kenya (Rights Issue):

- Hubris increased Hubris' shareholding in Sanlam Kenya from a direct shareholding of 57.14% to 66.19% having taken up all its entitlements under the Rights Issue and at the close of the Rights Issue and commencement of trading on 04 June 2025, holding 359,700,000 ordinary shares of KES 5 each in Sanlam Kenya's issued share capital (Initial Allotment); and
- Hubris and/or SAZ is expected to increase SAZ's direct and indirect shareholding to a shareholding of 71.47%, following the close of the Rights Issue and pursuant to the terms of the Rights Issue Information Memorandum dated 3 April 2025 and the underwriting agreement entered into between Sanlam Kenya and SAZ dated 03 April 2025 (Underwriting Agreement) as SAZ and/or Hubris is expected to be allotted a further 100,579,535 of KES 5 each in Sanlam Kenya (Subsequent Allotment), taking their total allotment to 460,279,535 ordinary shares of KES 5 each, being approximately 71.47% of Sanlam Kenya's issued share capital post the Rights Issue, (the Transactions).

The Transactions trigger the provisions of regulations 3(1) and 4 of The Capital Markets (Take-overs and Mergers) Regulations, 2002 (Take-over Regulations) under which Hubris and SAZ will be deemed as having acquired effective control of Sanlam Kenya.

Completion of the Transactions is subject to obtaining all relevant regulatory approvals as detailed in the public announcement of Hubris and SAZ dated 6 June 2025 pursuant to Regulation 4(1) of the Capital Markets (Take-overs & Mergers) Regulations 2002 (the Take-over Regulations).

It is noted that SAZ and Hubris have announced that they do NOT intend to make a take-over offer for the remaining shares in Sanlam Kenya that are not directly or indirectly held by Hubris and SAZ following implementation of the Initial Allotment and the Subsequent Allotment, and that they have applied to the CMA for an exemption under regulations 5(2)(a); 5(2)(f) and 5(2)(g) of the Take-over Regulations.

Shareholders and the investing public are advised to exercise caution when dealing in Sanlam Kenya ordinary shares on the Nairobi Securities Exchange pending further announcement, if required.

Since taking office on September 13, 2022, President William Ruto has dramatically altered Kenya's foreign policy, straining diplomatic relations with neighbours including Sudan, the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC), South Sudan and Somalia.

Once a beacon of peace and trusted regional mediator - credited for helping broker the 2005 Comprehensive Peace Agreement in Sudan and the formation of Somalia's transitional government in 2004 - Kenya is now viewed by some as a partisan actor in regional conflicts.

In January 2024, President Ruto was named the African Union (AU) Champion for Institutional Reforms, taking over from Rwanda's Paul Kagame. But foreign policy analysts argue Kenya's growing economic ambitions, strategic interests, and security concerns have compromised its neutrality. Some now refer to Kenya as a "war facilitator."

Prof Peter Kagwanja, CEO of the Africa Policy Institute, says the Ruto administration has veered from traditional diplomacy anchored in national interests and pan-Africanism, in favour of more transactional engagement.

In February 2025, Kenya hosted Sudanese rebels - the Rapid Support Forces (RSF) - alongside 24 allied political parties and civil society organisations in Nairobi, where they launched a "parallel government." The move drew widespread condemnation, with critics citing Kenya's alleged business ties with RSF leader Mohamed Hamdan Daglo, also known as Hemedti, as a conflict of interest.

Sudan's Vice-Chair of the Sovereign Council, Malik Agar, accused Kenya of violating AU non-interference principles and launching an "assault" on Sudanese sovereignty. In response, Sudan recalled its ambassador, Kamal Jabara, and severed trade ties with Kenya - jeopardising $48.2 million in annual exports, mainly tea and tobacco.

The Kenya Human Rights Commission labelled Nairobi's decision a breach of international obligations, including the UN Charter, AU Constitutive Act, and Genocide Convention. "This move undermines Sudan's sovereignty, constitutes an act of hostility, and disregards the suffering of Sudanese civilians," read a statement on 28 February.

RSF leaders defended the Nairobi meeting, arguing the "Political Charter for the Government of Peace and Unity" aimed to foster national consensus and peace. Kenya denied backing the RSF, maintaining it was facilitating dialogue in line with its regional peacebuilding tradition.

Prime Cabinet Secretary Musalia Mudavadi, who also serves as Foreign and Diaspora Affairs Minister, insisted: "No parallel government was formed in Nairobi. Kenya abhors the balkanisation of sovereign states and supports a unified Sudan."

Still, the fallout reinforced Sudan's 2023 rejection of Kenya's leadership of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) Quartet on Sudan, citing perceived Kenyan bias towards Hemedti. Sudanese generals, including Gen Abdel Fattah al-Burhan and Gen Yasser al-Atta, accused President Ruto of meddling. "President Ruto should bring the Kenyan army to face us instead of interfering," said al-Atta in July 2023.

Tensions also flared with the DRC in December 2023 when Kenya allowed the launch of the Congo River Alliance, a rebel political-military coalition led by former electoral chief Corneille Nangaa and M23's Bertrand Bisimwa. DRC recalled its envoy after Ruto refused to arrest the leaders, saying: "Kenya is a democracy. We do not arrest people for statements - we arrest criminals."

In South Sudan, Ruto's diplomatic overtures through the Tumaini Peace Initiative - launched in May 2024 - have stalled. While Kenya's support for President Salva Kiir mirrors its past posture, opposition groups remain wary. Talks collapsed in February after the government insisted on aligning Tumaini with the 2018 peace deal, which opposition groups reject.

The National Salvation Front (NAS) boycotted the talks, citing Kenya's prior rendition of rebel figures Dong Luak and Aggrey Idri to Juba in 2017. NAS leader Gen Thomas Cirillo told The East African that Kenya could not be trusted as a neutral arbiter.

In Somalia, Kenya's ties with the breakaway region of Somaliland have also raised eyebrows. On 29 May, Somaliland President Abdirahman Mohamed Abdullahi Irro opened a "Mission Office" in Nairobi, two days after the Kenyan government halted its planned launch, citing its commitment to Somalia's territorial integrity and the One Somalia policy. The Somaliland Liaison Office has operated in Nairobi since 2018 but lacks formal diplomatic status.

Somaliland, which declared independence in 1991, has not gained international recognition but maintains informal relations with the UK, UAE, Ethiopia, and Taiwan. Kenya's engagement with the region has drawn repeated protests from Mogadishu, which sees it as an encroachment on Somali sovereignty.

Economy Reduced worker earnings have depressed demand for goods and services bringing cash flow problems

How rising levies have eroded payslips of Kenyan employees

This has breached Employment Act (2007), which prohibits employers from deducting more than two-thirds of basic pay

BY CONSTANT MUNDA

Last December, Gerald Mbalu received a text from his Sacco stating that Sh35,220.22 had been credited to his salary account. However, he could only withdraw Sh2,681.39 as his available balance. His take-home pay represented just 4.13 per cent of his Sh64,950 salary. This breached Kenya's Employment Act (2007), which prohibits employers from deducting more than two-thirds of an employee's basic pay to safeguard their rightful earnings.

For context, Mr Mbalu has two loans from the Sacco that processes his salary: a development loan and a Fosa loan. The development loan, which he initially secured using a title deed, is deducted from his payslip, while the Fosa loan is deducted directly from his salary account without appearing on the payslip. He also took out a Sh60,000 mobile loan from the same Sacco, repayable over three months, with the first instalment due in December. This repayment is likewise deducted from his salary (Fosa) account without appearing on his payslip.

"I go to work every month to repay loans," Mr Mbalu says. "What remains after deductions barely covers water, electricity and airtime. The loans funded a business that sustains our basic needs, but sales haven't been sufficient in recent years to service the debt. If I lost my job today, I'd return

DEDUCTIONS

Shrinking salaries as deductions mount

Healthcare: Since October 2023, the Social Health Insurance Fund (SHIF) deducts 2.75% of gross earnings.

Housing Levy: A 1.5% deduction began in July 2023. Until December 2023, both were subject to double taxation before the Tax Laws Amendment Act 2024 provided relief.

NSSF: From February 2024, minimum contributions rose from Sh420 to Sh480, with the ceiling increasing from Sh2,160 to Sh3,840.

home with nothing but my NSSF pension savings."

Mr Mbalu's situation mirrors that of many workers struggling with existing loan obligations, exacerbated by increased statutory deductions supporting President William Ruto's universal healthcare and affordable housing programmes. Employers warn that shrinking take-home pay since 2023 has created legal compliance challenges for companies and financial institutions.

The Federation of Kenya Employers (FKE) estimates deductions now consume 40-45 per cent of average gross pay, eroding purchasing power in an economy largely driven by consumption. "Continuing to raid payslips means employees will have nothing left, forcing them into perpetual bor-

Ruto's broken promises: Youth demands still largely unmet

BY JACKLINE MACHARIA AND NDUBI MOTURI

President William Ruto has struggled to keep pace with promises made to Kenyan youth following the anti-government protests that shook the country in June and July 2024.

An analysis of commitments he made on July 5 reveals that many remain unfulfilled.

One of the youth's key demands was an end to harambees by political leaders in churches, arguing that politicians were misusing the pulpit to promote themselves and waste public resources.

In response, President Ruto announced a ban on public servants participating in church fundraisers and directed the Attorney-General to draft legislation to guide structured and transparent public contributions.

"No state officer and public servant shall participate in public contributions henceforth," Dr Ruto said.

But on March 9 this year, the President donated Sh20 million at AIC Fellowship Annex in Eldoret, just a week after pledging the same amount at Jesus Winners Ministry in Nairobi. He also promised to rally friends to raise Sh100 million to complete the church, triggering protests from angry youth in Nairobi, who accused him of violating his own directive.

In fact, barely weeks after the decree, Ruto contradicted himself by offering funds for a church in Ndaragwa, Nyandarua County. "I am instructing my Deputy President Rigathi Gachagua and the church leadership to assess what is needed so I can write a cheque," he said.

In November 2024, the Catholic Church returned a donation of Sh2.6 million from the President and another Sh200,000 from Nairobi Governor Johnson Sakaja, citing its opposition to using religious platforms for political promotion.

Eight months on, nothing has changed. State officers continue to make donations in churches almost every weekend.

The proposed Public Fundraising Appeals Bill, 2024, introduced by Kericho Senator Aaron Cheruiyot to regulate such contributions, faced stiff resistance in the Senate. Lawmakers argued that overregulating harambees would hurt the poor and stifle community development.

Ruto also promised to form a taskforce to audit public debt. He appointed a team chaired by Nancy Onyango and deputised by Prof Luis Franceschi to evaluate the value for money on loans and funded projects.

However, the High Court blocked its operations after Nakuru-based surgeons Dr Magare Gikenyi and Eliud Matindi challenged its legality, arguing it usurped the role of the Auditor-General.

"We had planned to do an audit of the public debt; we did not succeed," the President admitted on March 7 while unveiling a 10-point reform deal with former Prime Minister Raila Odinga, which includes an audit of the national debt.

Another promise was to dissolve 47 state parastatals with overlapping mandates to cut costs. On January 21, the government announced nine would be dissolved, 42 merged, and six restructured.

Ruto also suspended the appointment of Chief Administrative Secretaries (CASs). However, many former CASs have since been reassigned to other state roles. For instance, former Nairobi Governor Evans Kidero now chairs the Kenya National Trading Corporation, while former Rarieda MP Nicholas Gumbo chairs the Kenya Sugar Board.

The pledge to cut the number of government advisers by half has also faltered. Instead, the President has hired more advisers, including Prof Adams Oloo, Joe Ager, Dr Silvestor Okumu Kasuku and Maj (Rtd) Ali Mahat Somane, all appointed in December 2024. In August, former CS Moses Kuria was also named senior adviser to the Council of Economic Advisers.

The offices of the First Lady, Second Lady, and spouse of the Prime Cabinet Secretary were another point of contention during protests, with demands for their closure. Ruto announced that their budgets would be scrapped.

While budget provisions were removed, State House Comptroller Katoo Ole Metito later appealed to Parliament to reinstate Sh591 million to pay staff at the rowing and eventual distress that could spark social unrest," FKE executive director Jacqueline Mugo warned in January. "This undermines the value of employment, creating a 'working poor' class - something Kenya cannot afford."

The Ministry of Health implemented Social Health Insurance Fund (SHIF) deductions at 2.75 per cent of gross earnings last October, over a year after introducing a 1.5 per cent housing levy deduction in July 2023. Until 27 December last year, both deductions faced double taxation as the Kenya Revenue Authority calculated PAYE on gross amounts before the Tax Laws Amendment Act (2024) provided relief.

From February, National Social Security Fund contributions increased, with minimum deductions rising from Sh420 to Sh480 and maximum contributions increasing from Sh2,160 to Sh3,840. On May 1, employers proposed reforms including pegging statutory deductions to basic rather than gross pay, reducing the housing levy to 0.5 per cent, and expanding tax relief bands from Sh24,000 to Sh36,000.

The housing levy collected Sh54.16 billion in its first year (ending June 2024), with projections of Sh65.53 billion by June 2025 and Sh95.84 billion the following year. However, reduced worker earnings have depressed demand for goods and services, compounding cash flow problems in an economy where government suppliers are owed billions.

FKE attributes firms' financial strain to low demand, liquidity constraints, rising costs, an unpredictable tax regime, frequent legislative changes, market contraction and lost competitiveness. This has stifled job creation, with some companies replacing permanent staff with casual workers.

Kenya Revenue Authority data shows private sector average gross monthly pay fell 2.89 per cent year-on-year to Sh75,781 between June-September 2023 - the first such decline in 30 years, attributed to organisational restructuring to manage costs.

First Lady's office, citing potential legal consequences for breaching employment contracts.

Among other austerity measures was the halving of the renovation budget for State House and Lodges, initially pegged at Sh1.5 billion. A revised budget reflected these cuts.

Ruto also ordered all public servants aged 60 and above to retire without contract extensions. But the High Court suspended this directive after Caroline Wambui Mwangi challenged it, warning of legal and financial consequences.

The President's promise to review government transport policy is ongoing.

Treasury CS John Mbadi has since announced a draft policy to cut transport costs. Additionally, the government suspended vehicle purchases for 12 months - except for security agencies - and slashed nearly Sh1 billion meant for new cars in the revised budget.

Order The National Police Service has been instructed to stop his salary immediately and officers to visit his home Police declare Samidoh deserter, faces arrest

A memo states that he failed to report to work after being transferred from Central to Gilgil

BY NYABOGA KIAGE

Twelve days after Mugithi star Samuel Ndirangu Muchoki, popularly known as Samidoh, shared a cryptic post following his transfer, his commander has accused him of deserting duty and called for his arrest.

In an internal memo, a Kennedy Barasa, writing on behalf of Anti-Stock Theft Unit (ASTU) boss Joseph Limo, stated that Mr Samidoh failed to report to work on May 27, 2025, after being transferred from the Central region police headquarters to Gilgil.

"The officer was granted off-duty and was supposed to report back on 27/05/2025 but failed. Since then, he has not been seen, and efforts to trace him have been futile," reads the signal.

Mr Barasa said the singer had been absent for over 10 days without explanation, qualifying him as a deserter under police service regulations.

He directed the National Police Service (NPS) to stop his salary immediately and instructed officers to visit Mr Samidoh's home in Gatumbiro, Nyandarua County, to establish his whereabouts.

Efforts by Nation to reach Samidoh were unsuccessful by press time.

According to the NPS, desertion has serious consequences, including dismissal, criminal charges, imprisonment, a criminal record, and loss of benefits. It also reduces police capacity, affects morale, and undermines public confidence.

Under the National Police Service Act Chapter 84 (Revised 2014), desertion is a criminal offence. Section 94(1) provides that: "A police officer who absents himself from duty without leave or just cause for a period exceed-

10

The number of days that the Anti-Stock Theft Unit says Samuel Ndirangu Muchoki, popularly known as Samidoh, has missed work ing ten days shall, unless the contrary is proved, be considered to have deserted from the Service."

Section 94(3) further states: "Any police officer who deserts from the Service commits an offence and is liable on conviction to summary dismissal or imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years."

However, a separate letter dated April 25, 2025, showed that Samidoh had been cleared by his superiors to travel to the US from May 20 to June 9, 2025.

During this time, Nation established that the singer performed in the UK and Ireland and spent time with his family in the US. Before travelling abroad, he had held several shows across Kenya, including Limuru Road, Rongai (Kajiado), Thika, and Githurai 45.

On May 28, the singer posted a photo on his verified social media pages in Southall, London, captioned: "The tree does not curse the axe; it grows around the wound and reaches higher still."

The next day, he shared a Thomas Jefferson quote: "When justice becomes law, resistance becomes duty," while standing next to a British Transport Police (BTP) vehicle.

Mr Samidoh's transfer had earlier raised public concern, prompting Inspector General Douglas Kanja to clarify that redeployments among civil servants are normal - and that the artist was no exception.

The controversy began on May 16 when a video went viral showing him performing at an undisclosed venue as revellers chanted "wantam," slang for "one term" - a slogan used by President William Ruto's political opponents ahead of the 2027 elections. The video alarmed police leadership and reportedly triggered disciplinary action.

Mr Samidoh was also absent from a State House meeting convened by President Ruto for artists from the Mount Kenya region. The meeting was held on Monday

INDEPENDENT AUDITORS' REPORT ON THE CONDENSED FINANCIAL STATEMENTS TO THE MEMBERS OF COUNTY PENSION FUND

The accompanying condensed financial statements of County Pension Fund which comprise the statement of net assets available for benefits as at 31 December 2024, the statement of changes in net assets available for benefits and the statement of cash flows for the year then ended, are derived from the audited financial statements of the Fund for the year ended 31 December 2024.

In our opinion, the accompanying condensed financial statements are consistent, in all material respects, with the audited financial statements of the Fund, in accordance with International Financial Reporting Standards and the requirements of the Retirement Benefits Act as applicable to summary financial statements.

Condensed financial Statements

The condensed financial statements do not contain all the disclosures required by International Financial Reporting Standards as applicable to annual financial statements. Reading the condensed financial statements and the auditors' report thereon, therefore, is not a substitute for reading the audited financial statements of the Fund and the auditors' report thereon.

The audited financial statements and our report thereon

We expressed an unmodified audit opinion on the audited financial statements in our report dated 28 March 2025.

Responsibilities of Trustees for the Financial Statements

The Trustees are responsible for the preparation of the condensed financial statements in accordance with International Financial Reporting Standards and the requirements of the Retirement Benefits Act as applicable to condensed financial statements.

Auditors' responsibility

Our responsibility is to express an opinion on whether the condensed financial statements are consistent, in all material respects, with the audited financial statements based on our procedures, which were conducted in accordance with International Standard on Auditing (ISA) 810 (Revised), Engagements to Report on Summary Financial Statements.

Matrimonial property Court comes to the aid of Voi woman whose partner tried to walk out

'Marriage by cohabitation' upheld in couple's dispute over property

According to the High Court, cohabitation over a prolonged period is sufficient to raise a presumption of marriage

BY BRIAN OCHARO

Have you been cohabiting with your partner for over a decade without formalising the union, only for it be dismissed later as a casual relationship?

The court may have your back. According to the High Court, cohabitation over such a prolonged period is sufficient to raise a presumption of marriage.

The High Court in Voi has come to the aid of a woman whose partner tried to walk out and deny her any rights to the property acquired during their cohabitation which began in 2003.

"I find that the respondent sufficiently proved, on a balance of probabilities, that a presumption of marriage existed between herself and the appellant based on their prolonged cohabitation, mutual intention to marry, and public acknowledgment as husband and wife," Justice Asenath Ongeri stated in a judgment dated May 30.

The judge said the land they owned, a vehicle and household items constituted matrimonial property under the Matrimonial Property Act, 2013.

She said evidence presented demonstrated that the assets were acquired and developed during the subsistence of the relationship, with contributions from both parties.

The case was first filed before Magistrate D.M. Ndungi at the Taveta Law Courts in 2020, when a woman identified as JLM (respondent) sought several declarations including a presumption of marriage between her and the man, identified as WMG (appellant) and that they were husband and wife under the law.

"I pray for a permanent injunction restraining WMG, whether by himself, his agents, or servants, from intimidating, threatening, or harassing me in any manner whatsoever," she stated.

She further sought a declaration that she was legally entitled to reside in the matrimonial home without interference. JLM testified that she met WMG in 2003 and they began cohabiting in 2005, living together in various towns including Mombasa, Nairobi and Taveta. She claimed that all listed properties were acquired during their union.

In his defence, WMG claimed they began cohabiting in 2010 not 2003 as alleged and denied any marital relationship, describing it as a "simple relationship" that could not be considered a marriage.

According to JLM, this is the year when she started cohabiting with WMG. But the latter disputed this in his evidence.

He said they cohabited from 2010 until 2021, when JLM discovered he was in a romantic relationship with another woman, whom he referred to as his second wife.

Upon analysing the evidence, the magistrate found that the man regarded JLM as his first wife and the other woman as his second.

Mr Ndungi ruled in favour of JLM granting all her prayers. Although WMG claimed cohabitation began in 2010, the court held that the admitted duration was still long enough to raise a presumption of marriage.

The magistrate also found both parties had the legal capacity and mutual intention to marry and had publicly held themselves out as husband and wife until JLM discovered the second relationship.

Unhappy with the decision, WMG moved to the High Court in Voi, arguing that the magistrate erred in finding a presumption of marriage despite his evidence to the contrary. He also faulted the court for classifying the properties as matrimonial without definitive proof.

WMG argued that some relationships involve cohabitation without any intent to marry and that presumption of marriage no longer applies under the current Marriage Act. He said JLM failed to provide proof of a customary marriage or evidence of having met formal requirements, maintaining that they had separated and were no longer living together.

He also claimed he had built the house in question before meeting JLM and denied her financial contribution. But JLM testified that she constructed a two-bedroom house on the disputed land and submitted photographs.

After re-evaluating the evidence, Justice Ongeri upheld the lower court's findings.

"Consequently, this appeal is hereby dismissed in its entirety. The judgment of the trial court is upheld. The respondent (JLM) shall have the costs of this appeal," the judge ruled.

Mutunga, Karua sue Tanzania after denial of entry

BY SAM KIPLAGAT

Former Chief Justice Willy Mutunga, senior counsel Martha Karua and four other Kenyans have sued the Government of Tanzania for refusing them entry to attend the trial of opposition leader Tundu Lissu.

Dr Mutunga, Ms Karua, Ms Gloria Kimani, a Law Society of Kenya council member, Ms Lynn Ngugi, Mr Hussein Khalid and Ms Hanifa Adan, were denied entry in Tanzania on May 18. The trial was scheduled for May 19.

In a petition filed at the East African Court of Justice, the six are seeking special damages for contravening their rights, a public apology and removal of "refusal of entry" stamp from their passports.

"The actions of the respondent (Tanzania government) against the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6 applicants as affected residents of the East African Community, in their detention and refusal of entry constitute a failure on the part of the Respondent to abstain from measures likely to jeopardise the implementation of the provisions of the Treaty and Protocol, as required under Article 8(1)(c) of the East African Community Treaty, 1999 (as amended)," the petition stated.

East African Law Society and Pan African Lawyers Union are also petitioners in the case filed before the regional court.

Why medics cannot be silent on police brutality

It always starts the same way. News of an unlawful arrest. Trumped-up charges. A forced disappearance. An abduction. Unlawful detention of a suspect. Then the unthinkable; another death in police custody. A body lies lifeless. A name begins to circulate online. Grief follows. Then outrage. This is followed by vague and ambiguous justification of the death by the police.

This week, that name was Albert Ojwang, a 31-year-old, an only child, recently married, and a new father. He died at the hands of those who took an oath to protect life. His family is shattered. His infant child will grow up without a father. Another life stolen. Another tragedy that should never have been.

Every time police unleash violence on civilians, it is our health system that is forced to pick up the pieces. Hospitals become trauma centres for victims of baton blows, rubber bullets, tear gas and live rounds. Medical professionals are pulled away from other critical duties to treat preventable injuries. Paramedics and ambulances are routinely obstructed, and health workers themselves are assaulted while trying to save lives.

This is not just brutality, it is sabotage of our health-care system. When State violence overwhelms emergency rooms, consumes medical resources and inflicts long-term physical and psychological damage, the police are not protecting the public, they are creating a health crisis. And it is the doctors, nurses, counsellors and pathologists left to clean up the mess.

Police brutality is more than a legal or human rights issue. It is a public health crisis, an epidemic with consequences that ripple far beyond the moment of impact. We regularly talk about poverty, poor housing and limited access to education as factors that shape people's health. But one critical issue is almost always left out: police violence. And yet, the connection is clear.

The brutality harms health in several ways. First, through deadly force that drives up death rates in certain communities, through the trauma and stress that trigger long-term illness. Secondly through arrests and jail time that destabilise families, and finally a wider system of fear and disempowerment that chips away at people's mental health and well-being.

The so-called "non-lethal" weapons—tear gas, rubber bullets and batons are not harmless. Research has shown that these weapons leave lasting damage: permanent vision and hearing loss, pregnancy complications, worsened asthma and post-traumatic stress. And for communities already living on the edge, the repeated trauma takes a deeper toll, raising the risk of chronic conditions like high blood pressure and diabetes. More shockingly, new studies in epigenetics suggest that this kind of trauma can even imprint on our DNA, with effects that may be passed down to future generations, affecting their health and well-being.

As physicians, pathologists and mental health professionals, we cannot pretend to be neutral observers when police violence is tearing apart the very communities we claim to serve. It maims bodies, shatters minds and strips people of their faith in the health system. And when we say nothing, when we look away or hide behind our white coats, our silence is not neutrality. It is betrayal.

This country demands more from us. Not just the skill of our hands but the courage of our convictions. We cannot continue to patch up the broken without challenging the hand that breaks

Stellah Bosire | Health

We are not bystanders. We are the ones who see the bruises up close, who stitch the wounds, who repair the fractures, who amputate limbs too injured to function, who certify the deaths, who cut open bodies to expose the truth. We are the ones who speak to grieving families, who try to calm the terror that lingers long after the sirens. And yet, far too many of us have chosen silence. We have stayed in our clinics, our labs, our lecture halls, safe, detached, unwilling to confront the violence that walks through our doors. In doing so, we have failed in our duty, not just as professionals, but as human beings.

Physicians are not just caregivers; we are witnesses, record-keepers and truth-tellers. Our ethical code binds us to speak truth to power, especially when power abuses the vulnerable. Let us be honest, statements of "solidarity" have become a comfortable shield for our inaction. What use is a declaration that cannot name the violence for what it is? What kind of solidarity refuses to say the words "police brutality"? What is the point of professional neutrality if it only serves to protect those in power while leaving victims to suffer alone?

It is not enough to say "We stand with the victims". That is the bare minimum. We must say, loudly and without ambiguity: "We stand against the perpetrators." And more than that, we must act. Anything less is cowardice dressed up as professionalism. We must begin by calling out police brutality explicitly in our statements, journals, public platforms and lectures. We must teach medical students that systemic violence is a health issue, not just a headline. Medical associations must push for structural reforms in the way police interact with protesters, healthcare providers and civilians.

We must demand that our professional bodies—Kenya Medical Association, Kenya Psychiatric Association, Kenya Association of Clinical Pathologists—join us in calling out State-sanctioned violence. These institutions must not only issue statements, but also support physicians who choose to bear witness, provide care in protests, or speak out publicly.

We must also work with legal and human rights bodies to document, archive and testify to instances of abuse. The autopsy table is not just a place of death; it is a site of truth. Let us honour that.

The brutalisation of Kenyan citizens in the hands of the police is a public health emergency. It is not just the domain of activists and lawyers. It is our fight too. Because when a mother cannot reach an ambulance for her bleeding son, when a paramedic is beaten for administering CPR, when a child dies of asthma triggered by tear gas, we are failing in our moral obligation as health workers.

This country demands more from us. Not just the skill of our hands but the courage of our convictions. We cannot continue to patch up the broken without challenging the hand that breaks.

Police brutality is not merely a law and order issue. It is a health issue. And it is time the Kenyan medical community said so, loudly, clearly and without fear.

Public apprehension and scepticism remain among the most significant challenges to the acceptance of GMOs in Kenya

Nehemiah Ngetich | Agriculture

Building trust and ensuring safety of GMOs

Genetically modified organisms (GMOs) continue to spark intense debate across Kenya. Since the first GMOs appeared on the world stage in the mid-1990s and Kenya officially authorised their imports in 2011, the country has witnessed significant developments in biotechnology and biosafety.

The National Biosafety Authority is hosting its annual national conference to examine progress in modern biotechnology. Policymakers, scholars, farmers and government officers are meeting in Naivasha for the conference with the theme: 13 years later; building trust and ensuring safety of genetically modified organisms.

The conference aims to assess our progress in the biosafety sector and create a platform for national dialogue on modern biotechnologies and biosafety matters. Further, it seeks to close the gap between science, policy and public perception. The main aim is to enhance public understanding by transparently showcasing the regulatory systems in place to safeguard Kenyans, thereby empowering citizens to make informed, evidence-based decisions regarding GMOs.

Climate change has intensified the frequency of droughts, floods, and erratic rainfall patterns, making food insecurity one of Kenya's most pressing challenges. This crisis is further exacerbated by rapid population growth and recurrent outbreaks of pests and diseases. To address these multifaceted threats, the adoption of modern biotechnology is both timely and essential.

However, the rapid advancement of biotechnology necessitates robust oversight, as it may raise safety concerns if not properly regulated. In response, the government has implemented a comprehensive regulatory frameworks governing the development, handling, and distribution of GMOs to ensure public health and environmental safety.

Despite GMOs existing for over a decade, most Kenyans still don't understand them. Widespread misinformation creates fear about these products. Other countries invest heavily in modern biotechnologies, and delays may cause Kenyan farmers to miss out on better crops as the country relies heavily on imported products. Stakeholder engagement ensures transparency and dialogue over biosafety concerns.

Public apprehension and scepticism remain among the most significant challenges to the acceptance of GMOs in Kenya. To address this, the authority mandates that all GMOs undergo thorough and evidence-based scientific risk assessments prior to approval for public release. Public engagement is integral to this process; through structured participation and gazettement procedures, we promote awareness, invite public input, and incorporate stakeholder feedback.

Participating in conversations like this annual conference, accepting public participation invites and providing opinions and information to the authority drives the country forward in biotechnology. Through trust and responsibility, we look forward to a future of food sustainability, adaptation and integration of biotechnology advancements while ensuring the safety of humans, animals and the environment.

Mr Ngetich is the acting CEO of the National Biosafety Authority.

Solve SHIF hitches to ease healthcare

There seems to be no end in sight to the new Social Health Insurance Fund (SHIF) nightmare. Since it was rolled out last October under the Social Health Authority (SHA), the new system has faced some serious challenges.

Enough has been said about the chaotic unveiling of the SHIF to replace the National Health Insurance Fund (NHIF). The changeover was intended to improve healthcare delivery in public hospitals and health centres, but it is instead getting worse.

The NHIF had its shortcomings, but it worked and had been in operation for six decades. With hindsight, it is becoming evident that it would probably have been better to retain and improve the old system. Technical challenges and other problems are hampering patients' access to quality healthcare.

Sadly, the system meant to ease access to healthcare for Kenyans has become a source of agony. Patients are now being denied treatment as the SHA demands full payment upfront. This is, of course, literally locking out the majority, who cannot raise the funds at once, and it will adversely affect public healthcare delivery.

Thousands have been denied both inpatient and outpatient services after the SHA began demanding full annual premium payments before providing care. This is already happening across some 10 counties.

Many patients have been left stranded at the health facilities, or have been forced to pay out of pocket, or return home untreated, despite religiously making their monthly contributions to the SHIF.

Given the tough economic times and the runaway cost of living, it's quite unreasonable to demand full payment upfront, especially from poor, critically ill patients. This is a flagrant contradiction of President William Ruto's suggestion that the people should be encouraged to make little daily payments.

Medical Services Principal Secretary Ouma Oluga says the government will address all the concerns that have been raised. It had better do so immediately to curb the suffering of patients and their families.

Avert teachers' strike

Trouble is again brewing in the education sector, with the teachers' unions issuing a strike warning over delayed collective bargaining agreement (CBA) negotiations.

This comes not long after the release of capitation funds to schools after more than a month into the second term. School heads have been struggling to fund recurrent expenditure and clear pending bills to keep the institutions running.

Bearing the brunt, as these hitches disrupt school programmes, are the learners. The teachers, who should be paying more attention to them, are left agitating for what they truly deserve.

As talks between the unions, on the one hand, and the government and the Teachers Service Commission (TSC), on the other hand, stall, learning in public schools will be disrupted. After all, in only three weeks, the 2021–2025 CBA that the unions signed with the TSC will expire.

To make matters worse, there is no provision for increased salaries for teachers in the 2025–2026 national Budget. The Kenya National Union of Teachers (Knut), the Kenya Union of Post-Primary Education Teachers (Kuppet), and Kenya Union of Special Needs Education Teachers (Kusnet) all want negotiations to begin immediately or they will institute industrial action.

The Knut is demanding a 60 per cent adjustment of the basic salaries over the four years and a 30 per cent increase in allowances. The union also wants promotions based on merit, experience, and qualifications.

Kuppet is calling for a salary increment of between 30 and 70 per cent, and a 100 per cent increase in some allowances.

Negotiations with the unions should begin in earnest so that all the issues being raised can be tackled. Knee-jerk reactions after strikes start only punish the learners more. The unions, too, should make reasonable demands, considering the prevailing dire economic situation.

Think before you make that post

Kenyans hold a remarkable title as the world's top users of social media. According to the Digital 2025 Report, we spend an average of four hours daily on platforms like X, Instagram and TikTok. This shows that we have enablers, including electricity, affordable internet and smartphones within reach. It proves we enjoy freedom of speech. From the bustling streets of Nairobi to the quiet villages up-country, we are connected, vocal and extremely powerful.

But with great power comes great responsibility. Social media is the most incredible tool humanity has ever created. It can lift us up, open doors and change lives. Or, it can trip us and haunt us for years to come. The choice is ours, especially for our youth, who are shaping their futures one post at a time.

Think of social media as a tool, such as a kitchen knife or a motor vehicle. A knife chops vegetables to feed a family, but in careless hands, it cuts deep. A car takes us to work or school, yet misuse turns it into a danger on the road. Tools can maim, maul and destroy when misused, sometimes unintentionally, sometimes with malice.

Social media is no different. It is our modern-day equivalent of the sharpened stones that propelled early humanity forward. Through it, we have drawn global attention to injustices, rallied for change, and made KOX (Kenyans On X) a force that our local politicians, and even world leaders, cannot ignore.

Yet, too often, we let this tool turn into something darker. Online discourse can slide from passionate debate and de-escalate into insults, bullying and harassment. We have seen it all. A disagreement turns personal, a joke becomes a jab and suddenly, dignity is lost in the furious exchanges. Issue-based dialogue descends into personal attacks, tribal slurs, gender-based harassment and threats of violence.

Policing millions of posts is neither practical nor desirable. It is not that we lack laws;

One careless comment could bar you from entry into a country where you are chasing a life-changing opportunity

Musalia Mudavadi

our police have bigger battles to fight than chasing every anonymous troll. The real issue is us. We hold the power to decide whether this tool builds or destroys our future.

Let's consider the latest concerns on social media use. The United States visa process now includes deeper social media vetting, checking your posts, your handles, your digital trail, to gauge if you are a risk to its national security. The US State Department has instructed embassies and consulates around the world to pause new student visa appointments as it moves to expand social media screening and vetting of all applicants for student visas.

Other countries are catching on, expanding their checks on your social media footprint, aided by artificial intelligence. World over, immigration agencies often share notes. One careless comment could bar you from entry into a country where you are chasing a life-changing opportunity. As global migration tightens, many nations coordinate to share persona non grata lists, meaning missteps in one jurisdiction can close doors everywhere.

Do not let online outbursts lock those doors before you even knock. To be young today is to inherit boundless opportunity, and also, boundless risk. You may believe that a flippant post or a cheeky meme will vanish with time, or that you will never apply to be a judge, need a US visa, a post-graduate scholarship in Europe or a leadership role at a multinational headquarters. But who you are at 18 or 28 is not who you will be at 38 or 48. Maturity reshapes perspectives, ambitions evolve and mistakes recede. Yet the internet never forgets.

Imagine a promising graduate denied a regional CEO role because of an inappropriate tweet made during her or his first year at university. Or a young entrepreneur barred from pitching to global investors after past online vitriol against a foreign head of state comes to light. They are the unintended consequences of digital misadventure.

Your choices today could limit you and your family's opportunities tomorrow. That is not fearmongering, it is reality.

However, social media is also a goldmine. It is the most powerful tool in human history, and it is in your hands. With it, you can message a world leader, learn a skill or spark an ethical movement. Why waste it on petty feuds when you could use it to grow, connect and inspire?

My fellow brothers and sisters, this is not about silencing you. It is about empowering you. Use social media to build a legacy you will be proud of, a digital story that opens doors, not slams them shut.

Social media can be our ladder to greatness or a trap we will regret. For our youth, it is more than a pastime. It is a mirror of who you are and who you will become. And trust me, people in the future will judge you viciously because of your online persona. Every post is a brick in the foundation of your future.

So, let us wield this tool with care and purpose. Think before you type. Be the generation that shows the world what Kenya can do when we harness our voice for good.

Mr Mudavadi is the Prime Cabinet Secretary and Cabinet Secretary for Foreign and Diaspora Affairs.

Illicit funds • Deputy President Kithure Kindiki and some Kenya Kwanza MPs cannot continue to fool Kenyans about the source of the millions they have been dishing out in some parts of the country, says David Yator. "As we know how much they earn, their generosity is suspect. It's worrying as Kenya Ports Authority and NSSF have lost more than Sh100 billion!" His email address is davidyator14@gmail.com.

Border posts • Prime Cabinet Secretary Musalia Mudavadi's assurance that the development of the Mulwanda border post with Uganda is about to start is good news for Busia County, says Jim Okwako. ### Police brutality must come to an end

According to the International Justice Mission, one in three Kenyans have experienced police abuse or harassment, and over 500 killings by police having been documented between 2019 and 2021. Just last year, dozens of youth were killed, many are still missing and hundreds are nursing injuries thanks to police brutality. Now we learn of the death of Albert Ojwang in police custody. The role of police is to maintain order, preserve peace and to protect life and property. But in Kenya, they are feared for their diabolic reputation of oppression and violence against citizens. We are no longer safe in the hands of our police. Police brutality must stop!

Martin Kipyatich, Baringo

Kenyans should feel safe in police hands

Lately, there have been numerous reports of youth deaths in the hands of the police. It is saddening that deaths are reported in police cells, which should arguably be safe for anyone taken there. There is tight security in the police stations and thus, we do not expect such cases to be happening. Should suspects now be taken to churches? Would they be more safe there? Life should not be taken too casually, especially by the police, who are meant to protect it. Kenyans should be confident that once in the hands of the police, they will be safe.

Naum Ndinda Muli, Machakos

Ruto promise on killings broken so soon

The death of Albert Ojwang in the hands of police have awakened the public wrath that was experienced last year. All this comes after President William Ruto promised to end extra-judicial killings and abduction. No parent wants to bury his or her own child and so it is quite painful to see this happen so often nowadays. The government and authorities have become heartless and inhumane. There is no need of killing someone to make a point. In this era of Gen Z, expect no retreat and no surrender.

Lincoln Kinyua, Kiambu

Kenya Kwanza needs a paradigm shift

After 1,000 days of President William Ruto's rule, Kenyans would like to see a total paradigm shift. It has been a period where sometimes hopes and aspirations of most citizens have been raised and at most times in the pit of despair. The campaign promises were rosy and made citizens expectant—the time had come for Kenya to become a real "hustler nation". Now the fear that existed during the Daniel Moi rule has crept back. Further, nothing seems to work; from education to health and other sectors. All is not lost though. Let Kenya Kwanza give the country a new dawn in its remaining days.

David M. Kigo, Nairobi

Let us respect God in our actions

We are living in troubling times. Across social media platforms and public conversations, we are witnessing an unsettling trend of individuals claiming divine titles—Yesu wa Tongaren, Jehovah, John the Baptist and even Mary and Joseph. I am not here to judge or deny people's spiritual experiences; I am a believer, and I know that God works in mysterious ways. However, we must ask ourselves: where do we draw the line between faith and mockery? Further, respecting God's name is more than just about words it's about how we live. We cannot say "God bless Kenya" while corruption, injustice and hatred thrive.

Damiana Mwende, Chuka University

LETTER OF THE DAY

Let children play, it's key to their development

Today, Kenya will join the rest of the world in celebrating the International Day of Play, which highlights the importance of play in every child's life. This year's theme, "Choose play – every day", is a reminder that play is not a luxury—it is a fundamental right, essential for children's growth, learning and well-being.

Play is at the heart of childhood. It allows children to explore, imagine, create and build vital life skills. From a young age, children use play to make sense of the world around them. It helps them learn how to solve problems, cooperate with others, express emotions and gain confidence. Play supports physical health, enhances brain development and nurtures social and emotional resilience. Yet, in many communities, opportunities for safe and meaningful play are still limited.

Kenya has taken deliberate steps to integrate play into the education system, particularly through early childhood development programmes. The National Pre-Primary Education Policy and the Integrated Early Childhood Development Policy Framework emphasise the use of play-based learning approaches to promote active engagement and creativity among learners. County governments, which are responsible for early childhood education, have also made investments in improving playgrounds in public schools and early learning centres.

While these efforts are commendable, more remains to be done to ensure that every child, regardless of their background or location, has equal access to safe play environments. In informal settlements and rural communities, children still lack proper playgrounds or structured time to play. The pressure of academic performance and unsafe neighbourhoods also contribute to the decline in play opportunities.

Governments must increase investment in child-friendly play infrastructure and ensure that policies on play are fully implemented and enforced. Educators should continue to embrace play-based learning across all levels of education. Parents and caregivers should make time for play at home and support outdoor activities that enhance children's physical and mental health.

The private sector, civil society and community leaders must advocate inclusive and accessible play spaces.

Taita-Taveta Maize dealers abandon traditional sourcing regions due to shortages

Poor families live off spilled maize from Tanzania imports

Locals flock to the drying fields in Tave-ta every morning to collect what they can

BY LUCY MKANYIKA

Peter Kamuti, 70, lives alone in a mud-walled house in Bura Ndogo slums, Taita-Taveta County. His wife passed away years ago and his children, who are now grown, have moved on with their lives.

At his age, he can no longer fend for himself as he once did, and it is difficult for him to engage in menial labour.

His day begins at dawn when he rises up and treks to Tave-ta Airstrip to collect grains that have been discarded by traders who use the open field for drying their produce.

It is painstaking work, since the elderly man has to either bend or sit down on the grass to pick the grains that will sustain him for another day.

"Problems of life have made me come here every day. I don't have anything to eat. Due to my age, I don't have the energy to do menial jobs. Before this, I used to sleep hungry or depend on well-wishers to get food," he said, as he continued with his task.

Kenya has been grappling with a maize shortage in recent months, forcing millers to source supplies from the neighbouring Tanzania. Some dealers now transport the produce through the Tave-ta/Holili border and offload it in Tave-ta town for drying.

Drying is an essential process that reduces the moisture content to the required 13 per cent or less before dealers transport the maize to millers.

The maize is repackaged after being spread out to dry in an open field at the Tave-ta Airstrip. Struggling families flock in to collect spilled maize which has given them a lifeline. They are assured of a meal for the day.

Every morning as the sun rises, residents arrive at the airstrip field with containers and sacks to collect what they can.

Ms Eliza Kasua, a mother of four, has been coming to the field every day for three weeks. Previously, she made a living as a casual labourer. She weeded farms and washed clothes for people at a fee so that she could feed her children.

Ms Kasua said the menial jobs have become scarce, and, on some days, she returned home empty-handed and her children slept hungry. But now she is able to collect up to three kilograms of maize at the airstrip.

"I come here every day because I don't want my children to sleep hungry. Life has become so hard. Sometimes if I don't get money to make flour from the maize I've collected, I cook githeri," she said.

For others like Mr Wambua Mulwa, this has become the only way to survive.

"There are no jobs. If I get a job I won't come here. I pick up to 10kg of maize on a daily basis," he said.

Locals interviewed by the Nation said that food insecurity has been a major challenge, but for now, the maize drying field offers them a glimmer of hope in their daily struggle.

Maize dealers said they have abandoned their traditional sourcing regions in Western and the North Rift due to shortages and have now shifted operations closer to Tanzania where the supply is steady.

"We no longer rely on Western and the North Rift for maize. Tanzania has become our saviour. We are now doing cross-border sourcing from the neighbouring country and we buy maize at the Holili border market and ferry our consignment to the Tave-ta Airstrip field to dry," said Khalid Ahmed, an agent with Kitui Millers.

He said most of the maize arrives with a moisture content of around 16 per cent and traders must leave it to dry for a day or two to the required 13 per cent or less before repackaging and selling it to millers.

Mr Ahmed said the shortage is expected to last until October when maize from local farms will be ready for harvest.

"We leave the locals to pick the grains. It helps them fend for their families," he added.

Since maize millers and dealers in Western and the North Rift have suspended or scaled down operations, over 1,000 workers have followed the dealers to Tave-ta hoping to find employment in the temporary trading zones.

Mr Elijah Kariuki, a dealer, said the maize shortage has prompted many traders to shift operations to the border areas.

"We have moved with our workers here. That's why you're seeing a huge number of people in this field. We buy maize that is not fully dried so you must have a team to help with the work," he said.

Even porters have found opportunities here and locals are benefiting by selling food to the workers.

Mr John Wambula, a porter from Kitale in Trans Nzoia County, moved with a team of 60 workers to Tave-ta. With a maize shortage in Kitale and jobs dwindling, they had no choice but to move.

"We came to Tave-ta because we have to look for work. Our job is to unload, spread, and repack the maize," he said.

Makeshift camps have sprung up near the drying fields, where workers rest at night before resuming their work at dawn.

Napeitom rises: County builds new village for bandit attack survivors

BY SAMMY LUTTA

The Turkana County Government has built houses for survivors of the deadly 2022 bandit arson attack which claimed seven lives in Napeitom village.

Turkana Governor Jeremiah Lomorukai, who handed over the houses, said yesterday that the county administration is committed to rebuilding conflict-ravaged areas and restoring livelihoods.

"We are working with the national government to improve security and ensure lasting peace in banditry-prone regions," said Mr Lomorukai.

Napeitom chief Hanson Kaptan said 30 families have been resettled in permanent houses. He also said that more than 800 people were displaced during the attack.

"Only 30 families have permanent houses. Others are building temporary shelters, and many are yet to return. There is enough space though, and we hope that the county government will continue to build more houses," he said.

Survivors fled over 35 kilometres to Lokori where they received temporary shelter from the Kenya Red Cross.

For Mr James Lonyeet, a survivor, the resettlement is bitter-sweet. Four of his children were among the seven people burnt beyond recognition during the tragic raid.

"I was not at home at the time. I had a shop in the village, and sometimes I slept there. That saved my life," said Mr Lonyeet.

His wife, who was severely burned, was admitted to the Moi Teaching and Referral Hospital in Eldoret, Uasin Gishu for more than 10 months. She now lives with a disability.

"My house, savings and belongings were all burnt to ashes. I was reduced to a beggar. But I'm grateful to return to my ancestral home and start rebuilding," said Mr Lonyeet.

Another survivor, Jane Edete, said she would never have rebuilt her manyatta without government help.

"We want President William Ruto's administration to assure us of security," she said.

Residents have asked for help to reconstruct their lives after having lost property and businesses. Most of the survivors now depend on relief food.

But as the restoration efforts get underway, Turkana County Woman Representative Cecilia Ngiti has questioned the sustainability of building walls in volatile areas for security.

"A wall has been built at Napeitom as a desperate measure to secure locals. But is this the Kenya we want? Bandits can still jump over it. We need enough security in Napeitom to protect the people," she said, and urged the government to deal decisively with banditry.

County Police Commander John Tarus said locals should be accompanied by reservists while grazing their animals.

County Commissioner Julius Kavita said that the area will soon have a fully-fledged police station.

NAKURU

Naivasha MP Jayne Kihara

Auctioneers get nod to enter ex-MP's home

BY JOSEPH OPENDA

The High Court in Nakuru has authorised auctioneers to forcibly enter Naivasha MP Jayne Kihara's homestead to recover Sh7.5 million owed to former legislator John Mututho. Justice Julius Nangea issued a break-in order, permitting Mututho's appointed auctioneers, Impair Group of Companies, to access and attach Kihara's property in Maraigushu, Naivasha. The Naivasha police chief was directed to oversee the operation.

The debt stems from a 2008 election petition filed by Kihara against Mututho. In 2019, the court ruled in Mututho's favour, awarding him Sh7.5 million plus interest. However, Kihara allegedly obstructed repayment efforts, with auctioneers violently turned away during previous attempts. Mututho accused Kihara of using legal delays to avoid payment. Despite her written proposal to settle the debt, no meeting materialised. Three execution attempts were thwarted by armed guards.

Tharaka-Nithi

Trouble for Njuki as MCAs demand ward fund

BY DAVID MUCHUI

A political storm is brewing in Tharaka-Nithi County after members of the county assembly vowed to reject the proposed 2025/26 budget amid controversy over ward development funds.

The MCAs have taken a leaf out of their Meru counterparts' book, accusing Governor Muthomi Njuki's administration of failing to itemise the Sh6.8 billion budget and distribute resources fairly.

The impeachment of former governor Kawira Mwangaza was sparked by a row over ward fund allocation and the preparation of itemised budgets in October 2022.

As the standoff continued, the Controller of Budget advised that the county should implement development through Ward Community Projects.

The dispute over how to structure the Meru budget dragged on until July last year, with the deadlock eventually requiring mediation by the Controller of Budget's office.

In Tharaka Nithi, the feud was triggered by the allocation of approximately Sh285 million proposed for development projects in certain wards.

Among those who have publicly criticised Governor Njuki's administration are Majority Leader Luke Marengo (Mukothima), Deputy Speaker Leonard Kithuka (Nkondi), Sylvester Mutwiri (Gatunga), Njeru Ing'ara (Igambang'ombe), Kennedy Kamunyu (Marimanti), Murithi Gaturo (Karingani), Joseph Kinyua (Chiakiriga), and Nevert Ntwiga (Mithe-ru).

However, Deputy Governor Wilson Nyaga accused the MCAs of engaging in petty politics and misleading the public, adding that, for instance, Mithuru Ward had been allocated Sh39 million for the next financial year.

The interior of an enclosed homestead in Kuria, with houses interconnected. ALEX ODHIAMBO | NATION

A fortress of culture, security and heritage

Unlike designs elsewhere, Kuria homesteads are constructed with a deliberate logic

BY GEORGE ODIWUOR

Diving past Masaba from Suna in Migori County feels like crossing into another world.

The architecture that unfolds beyond the car window is unlike the sleek, modern structures familiar to first-time visitors.

Here, the built environment speaks of tradition and culture.

From Migori Town, the road meanders past Masaba, through Kehancha, and on to Ntimaru near the border between Kenya and Tanzania.

This region is home to the Kuria, a small, often marginalised ethnic group whose architectural identity has stood largely unchanged for generations.

In the heart of Kuria land, homes are not just places of shelter; they are fortresses of culture and protection.

Unlike contemporary designs elsewhere, Kuria homesteads are constructed with a deliberate logic.

A single entry and exit point controls movement, rendering gates optional. This restriction enhances security, particularly at night, guarding both people and livestock.

The houses, mostly circular and mud-walled, are built tightly together; their walls interconnected like clasped hands, forming a solid, unified barrier.

Though roofs may differ in shape and distance, the fusion of walls forms a defensive perimeter. From above, a Kuria homestead resembles a mosaic of rectangular enclosures seamlessly joined, creating a larger, singular compound.

Windows, especially at the rear, are often absent, another subtle but effective measure against nocturnal intrusions. The design may seem austere to outsiders, but to the Kuria, it is a living inheritance.

"I was born into it. My parents built this way, and my children will do the same," says Mwita Chacha, 49, from Kamasincha Village.

In contrast, neighbouring Luo, Luhya and Kisii communities typically construct homes where the main house stands facing the gate, flanked by separate houses for each wife, if polygamous.

Sons, upon coming of age, build their homes within the same compound, following a strict left-right pattern. Daughters, once married, move away to join their husband's home.

Though Kuria follows a similar familial structure, house spacing is far tighter.

"Our houses must be close so we can communicate easily and respond quickly if attacked," explains Mr Chacha.

Central to the compound is a shared kitchen, a hearth that nourishes the whole family, both physically and emotionally.

The Kuria's architectural style was born not of whim, but necessity. Night raids and cattle rustling once plagued the region. In response, Kuria ancestors developed this enclosed design, ensuring livestock were penned securely, with only one point of entry and exit.

"It's a defence strategy. Rustlers can only leave the same way they entered, making it easier to protect the animals," Mr Chacha says.

The importance of livestock security cannot be overstated. While other communities might tether animals to trees or build pens beside houses, Kuria farmers often sleep near their animals or even house them indoors, despite the stench, if the compound lacks secure walls.

The circular arrangement also anticipates future needs.

"People build extra houses for their sons, even when they're still young. It's about planning ahead," says Mr Chacha.

Walls can later be modified to accommodate changing family dynamics.

Compact layouts also free up land for farming. Unlike widely spaced Luo homesteads, Kuria homes conserve space, leaving more room for crops like maize.

Yet, this proximity has drawbacks, chief among them, hygiene. Animal waste often collects near doorways, making the compounds pungent to both insiders and outsiders.

However, overtime modernity is slowly nudging change with some families now adding back doors, even though these are typically reserved for family members.

"Sons-in-law are prohibited from using them," warns Mr Chacha.

A few residents are erecting permanent houses, but the traditional design is hard to replicate with concrete.

Despite the winds of change, the traditional Kuria homestead endures, a steadfast guardian of heritage, security and identity.

UN: Israel commits 'extermination' in Gaza by killing in schools

VIENNA, TUESDAY

United Nations experts said in a report on Tuesday that Israel committed the crime against humanity of "extermination" by killing civilians sheltering in schools and religious sites in Gaza, part of a "concerted campaign to obliterate Palestinian life".

The UN Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and Israel is due to present the report to Geneva-based UN Human Rights Council on June 17.

"We are seeing more and more indications that Israel is carrying out a concerted campaign to obliterate Palestinian life in Gaza," former UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Navi Pillay, who chairs the commission, said in a statement.

"Israel's targeting of the educational, cultural and religious life of the Palestinian people will harm the present generations and generations to come, hindering their right to self-determination," she added.

Israel disengaged from the Human Rights Council in February, alleging it was biased.

When the commission's report in March found Israel carried out "genocidal acts" against Palestinians by systematically destroying women's healthcare facilities, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said the findings were biased and antisemitic.

In its latest report, the commission said Israel had destroyed more than 90 per cent of the school and university buildings and more than half of all religious and cultural sites in Gaza.

"Israeli forces committed war crimes, including directing attacks against civilians and wilful killing, in their attacks on educational facilities...", it said.

Harm done to the Palestinian education system was not confined to Gaza, the report found, citing increased Israeli military operations in the West Bank and East Jerusalem as well as harassment of students and settler attacks there.

"Israeli authorities have also targeted Israeli and Palestinian educational personnel and students inside Israel who expressed concern or solidarity with the civilian population in Gaza...", it said. (Reuters)

Trump's mass deportation drive collides with city of immigrants

Agency working hard to show progress on Trump's signature policy

LOS ANGELES, TUESDAY

This weekend, tensions boiled over in Los Angeles after a week of immigration sweeps sparked violent protests against the President Donald Trump administration and the Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agency.

Trump's decision to send 700 US Marines and 4,000 National Guard troops to the Los Angeles area to support the federal response to the unrest has opened a volatile chapter in his mass deportation campaign.

The location of the raids and subsequent protests – a liberal-leaning city in a state controlled by Democrats – also gave the White House an ideal public foil as it seeks to show progress on removing illegal immigrants and instilling law and order.

Governor Gavin Newsom, a Democrat and prominent critic of the president, wrote on X that the troop deployment was a "deranged fantasy of a dictatorial President".

The raids in America's second-biggest city are unfolding against the backdrop of an aggressive push to raise arrest and deportation numbers, as the administration has been disappointed with its current pace.

ICE has ramped up its enforcement actions in recent weeks as it faces pressure to show progress on Trump's signature policy initiative. The agency arrested 2,200 people on June 4, according to NBC News, a record for a single day.

The network reported that hundreds of those arrested were enrolled in a programme known as Alternative to Detention, which allows for the release and monitoring of individuals not deemed an immediate threat.

White House Deputy Chief of Staff Stephen Miller, the man widely seen as the intellectual architect of the deportation policy, has repeatedly said the White House hopes that ICE can scale up to 3,000 arrests a day.

"President Trump is going to keep pushing to get that number up higher each and every single day," Miller told Fox News in May.

The Department of Homeland

Security said in a press release that the immigrants detained in the recent Los Angeles raids included individuals convicted of sex crimes, burglary and drug related charges, among other offences.

Local immigration advocates and community members, however, say that families have been torn apart and nonviolent immigrants detained.

At a rally on Monday, Los Angeles City councilmember Ysabel Jurado said that a Friday raid at a warehouse in the Fashion District "was not about public safety, it was a fear driven, state violence designed to silence, to intimidate, to disappear".

While opinion polls show that Trump's immigration policies are popular with a majority of Americans, some of his backers have expressed concern about tactics. The co-founder of Latinas for Trump, for example, Florida State Senator Ileana Garcia, wrote on X that "this is not what we voted for".

"I understand the importance of deporting criminal aliens, but what we are witnessing are arbitrary measures to hunt down people who are complying with their immigration hearings—in many cases, with credible fear of persecution claims—all driven by a Miller-like desire to satisfy a self-fabricated deportation goal," she added.

Federal authorities have conducted more frequent immigration raids across the US, in states that lean both towards Democrats and Republicans. Some Republican-controlled states, like Tennessee, have assisted federal authorities.

Images of violence and resistance on the streets of Los Angeles gave Trump a catalyst for the deployment of the National Guard.

"For his base, it does quite a bit. It shows he's serious, and allows them to show he will use all means necessary to enforce his [immigration] rules," said John Acevedo, an associate dean at Emory Law School.

Protesters in Los Angeles— which calls itself a sanctuary city, meaning it limits co-operation with federal immigration enforcement—did not relish the role they believed the administration had chosen for their city.

"This is my people, you know, I'm fighting for us," said Maria Gutierrez, a Mexican-American who protested for two days in Paramount, a city in LA County that saw protests after residents spotted ICE agents in the area.

The unrest there involved looting and at least one car burning. Authorities used rubber bullets and tear gas.

Ms Gutierrez believed undocumented immigrants who commit violent offences should be targeted, but not those who she believes work hard and aspire to a better life.

"This is our city. We're angry, we know how to protect ourselves and this isn't going to scare us," she said. (BBC)

Number of containers that had been stuck with tea in Sudan

Relief as Sudan lets in Kenyan tea cargo

BY ANTHONY KITIMO

Sudan has agreed to clear a consignment of Kenyan tea shipped to the strife-torn country before it imposed a ban on trade in Nairobi on March 11, 2025.

The cargo has been lying at Port Sudan for more than three months with shippers charging the cost of demurrage for the delayed time to return containers.

The East Africa Tea Trade Association (Eatta) has confirmed that they have been given the go-ahead to clear 207 containers of tea with 400 bags each which were in transit and already at the Port Sudan when the ban was effected. However, Eatta managing director George Omuga has maintained that the window is for a few days and the ban has not been lifted.

"It is a relief after Kenya and Sudan allowed us to clear the consignment but back home we have stockpiles at the port of Mombasa and at different warehouses as we cannot sell the stock to the country due to the existing ban," said Mr Omuga.

Grades

He added, "Sudan primarily imports specific tea grades that are not easily absorbed by other markets. The Mombasa Tea Auction is ongoing but without Sudanese special tea." Despite being allowed to clear the containers, tea dealers have expressed concern over the impact of the ban on exporters serving the Sudanese market bracing for cash flow difficulties which will inevitably affect producers and smallholder farmers.

With several containers loaded with special Sudan tea grades, exporters in Mombasa will have to continue paying for the warehouses' costs as specific tea grades cannot be easily redirected to other markets.

"Apart from selling consignment which was on supply chain while the ban was effected, the ongoing ban will significantly impact tea prices," Mr Kariuki Njenga, one of the tea dealers in Mombasa cautioned.

Budget Two offices were among casualties in a new purge on spending

COB declined Raila, Ruto Sh650m emergency spend

Cash was to be used on local trips and AUC campaigns in nine months to March

BY PETER MBURU

The Controller of Budget (COB) denied President William Ruto and Raila Odinga Sh649.6 million for spending on local trips and AU campaigns in the nine months to March in a new purge on irregular emergency spending.

While Treasury had in February approved State House to spend Sh1.5 billion on the President's local trips, hospitality and other activities under the emergency clause, COB Margaret Nyakang'o only authorised Sh1.16 billion to be used, declining to approve Sh342 million.

Treasury had also in November last year approved the state department for foreign affairs to spend Sh523.8 million funding Mr Odinga's campaigns for the African Union Commission Chairmanship. The COB, however, only approved Sh216.67 million in February 2025, slashing the amount by Sh307.5 million.

The two offices were among casualties in a new purge by the COB on public agencies the office accuses of insisting to spend unbudgeted public funds under Article 223 of the Constitution. The COB declined to approve Sh6.6 billion for spending under the emergency clause between July 2024 and March 2025.

On February 27, 2025, Treasury Cabinet Secretary (CS) John Mbadi approved Sh1.5 billion to be spent by State House under the emergency clause "to cater for utilities, rent, local presidential visits, hospitality services, fuel expenses and maintenance of motor vehicles." Between February 28, 2025 and March 19, 2025, COB Nyakang'o approved a total of Sh1.16 billion for State House to spend on the activities, failing to approve Sh342 million.

Amount of money the COB declined to approve as emergency spend between July 2024 and March 2025

High spending by State House under the emergency clause occurred as President William Ruto hosted over 130 delegations and other events at the State House, while making more than 160 local tours across different counties between July 2024 and March 2025.

"State House also benefited from additional funding that amounted to Sh1.16 billion under Article 223 of the Constitution to cater for utilities, rent, local visits, hospitality services, fuel expenses and maintenance of motor vehicles," Ms Nyakang'o said, citing instances when the government relied on the emergency kitty to fund existing programmes.

Hosting political leaders from different counties at the State House, Nairobi has been a key signature of President Ruto's rule. In March 2025 alone, the President hosted six delegations of leaders from Eastern, Western and Mt Kenya regions, and chaired the Kenya Kwanza Parliamentary Group meeting on March 7.

Expenses incurred when hosting the delegations such as meals, refreshments and other procurement-related activities to facilitate them are shouldered by taxpayers.

YOUR STARS

AQUARIUS | JAN 21 - FEB 19

The planets are providing a needed boost of energy to get everything done on time and under budget. Your ambition is at an all-time high, and there may not always be someone to delegate responsibilities to - yet. But your finances will improve as long as you keep your head down and do your work.

PISCES | FEB 20 - MAR 20

This week you're thinking job change, and viola, the forces appear to help out. Planets affecting your day-to-day work ask that you think about how to change your existing situation for the better (raise, anyone?) or start looking for something better

ARIES (MAR 21-APR 20

You're poised for a major breakthrough, thanks to support from aspects governing family and romance. Your spending has slowly but steadily decreased, and now it's time to have a little controlled fun. Your friends and social networks might want in on the action, but make sure it's clear that they have to pay their own way.

TAURUS | APR 21 - MAY 20

If you want a study in balance, look to your sign. It's no accident that you make excellent hosts. Currently your career life opposes your home life. Changing your home life to accommodate your work life by turning a spare room into an office..

GEMINI | MAY 21 - JUNE 21

Looking at your house of higher education and travel, you're hankering to trade information. You may be guided to teach now or return to school for a weekend class. Although you're certain to be texting and e-mailing your fingers off, your mind is on the bigger picture.

CANCER | JUN 22 - JULY 22

Your financial life is active this week. You're being asked to change the way you see money in your life. This may open up a new channel to manifest new sources of income if you keep your eyes open. Use your assertion to work on your debt. You have everything you need to make some serious dents in those bills.

LEO | JULY 23 - AUG 22

You're reconsidering your spending patterns as the credit card bills come in this week. If you're surprised by how much you've spent, blame the planets. Starting a home-based business can bring in the extra cash you need in the short term. Use your skills!

VIRGO | AUG 23 - SEP 23

Looking at your house of significant relationships, all is well on that front, but it wouldn't hurt to go over shared finances

SUDOKU

Enjoy the Sudoku Game Daily

Use Numbers 1-9. Sudoku is played on a grid of 9 x 9 spaces. Don't Repeat Any numbers. in the upper left square (circled in blue), this square already has 7 out of the 9 spaces filled in. Don't guess. Sudoku is a game of logic and reasoning, so you shouldn't have to guess. Use pocess of elimination.

CODEWORD

Each number in our Codeword grid represents a different letter of the alphabet. For example, today 14 represents R every time the figure 14 appears in x the main grid, then use your knowledge of words to work out which letters should go in the missing squares. As you get the letters, fill in other squares with the same number in the main grid and control grid. Check off the list of alphabetical letters as you identify them.

Death and Funeral Announcement

With profound sorrow and heartfelt respect, we announce the passing of Joshua Okumu Akach, who departed from us peacefully on June 7, 2025. Born on January 1, 1956, to the late Akach Awino and the late Consolata Nyandiga Ndawa, Joshua hailed from Kanjames Location, Kamungu Sub-location, Kobodo Division, in Ndiwa District of Homa Bay County. Devoted husband of Mrs. Veronica Achieng Okumu, with whom he shared a steadfast and loving partnership. Their union was blessed with four children: Boniface Okumu, Phillip Okumu, Beatrice Okumu, and Kevin Okumu. His family continued to grow with the addition of cherished daughters-in-law Lucy Nyarwai, Linda Muriu, and Valentine Kerubo, and a beloved son-in-law, Amos Momanyi. Joshua's pride and joy were his grandchildren: Sandra, Kaylah, Aisha, Meghan, Ibrahim, Kenzo, Jamal, Migan, Wesonga, Joel, Idah, Daniel, Alpha. Uncle of Barrack Akach, Evans Odhiambo, Nancy Atieno, and Sharon Anyango, Eric Omendi, Henry Ochieng, Felix Oryango, Jack Omendi, Swinyi Oguda, Michelle Oguda, Rahad Akach and Prof. Nguka. Beloved brother of the late Warenga Akach, the late Ndawa Akach, the late John Ouma. Also brother of Isaac Okundi, Manash Kidew, Lawrence Oguda, Grace Ndawa, Leonida Akach, Agnes Ndawa, and Serphina Akach. Joshua will be fondly remembered for his unwavering devotion to his family and the quiet strength he carried with grace. His warmth, kindness, and steady presence touched the lives of many. Through his gentle generosity, wise counsel, and deep love, Joshua left a lasting legacy in the hearts of all who knew him. Though he has departed from this world, his memory lives on - in the hearts of his family, his community, and all who had the privilege of walking part of life's journey with him. Joshua's body is currently resting at Kirindo Mortuary. Funeral arrangements are underway, with his final resting place to be at his rural home in Komungu on June 27, 2025.

Death and Funeral Announcement

Stephen Mokaya Nyakundi

It is with profound sorrow that we announce the passing on of Stephen Mokaya Nyakundi, on the 2nd of June, 2025 at Pandya Memorial Hospital in Mombasa County. Until his demise, Stephen was diligently working at Harambee DT Sacco as Mombasa FOSA Branch Manager.

Born on 26th January, 1980, to Samuel Getuma and Truphosa Nyaboke of Birongo Location, Keumbu Sub-county of Kisii County. Stephen was a devoted husband of Mrs. Risper Kwamboka Onkoba and their union was blessed with three lovely children: Christine Gesare Mokaya, Joan Nyaboke Mokaya and Brightone Onkoba Mokaya.

He was a beloved brother of the late Stella Nyang'ara, Jared Koroso, Duke Nyangoto and Emmanuel Getuma. He was son-in-law of the late Philip Onkoba Atemba and Dorcas Moraa of Nyang'eni Village, Birongo Location. His in-laws include: Fridah Bosibori, Ruth Monchari, Janet Nyanchoka, Pacifica Mokeira and Damaris Isaboke. He was a loving uncle of Derick Koroso, Daniel Koroso and Junior Koroso.

Stephen will be remembered for his unwavering commitment to his family and the warmth and kindness he extended to all who knew him. His legacy is entrenched in the lives he touched, with quiet generosity, heartfelt counsel, and enduring love.

Though he has left this earthly life, Stephen Mokaya Nyakundi's memory lives on in the hearts of his family, his community, and all those who were privileged to share in his journey.

The late Stephen's body is currently lying at Pandya Memorial mortuary, and the burial is scheduled for Friday, 13th June 2025 at his home in Kisii County Birongo Location.

May his soul rest in eternal peace

Kenyans eye glory at NCAA showpiece

BY BERNARD ROTICH IN OREGON, USA

More than 35 Kenyan athletes will compete in various races at this year's National Collegiate Athletics Association (NCAA) National Championships, set to begin today at Hayward Field in Eugene, Oregon.

A total of 28 athletes from Townhall Athletics will form the majority of participants in the track and field outdoor event.

The four-day championships also serves as a key build-up for the Kenyan trials ahead of the World Athletics Championships in Tokyo, Japan, scheduled for September 13-21.

Among those competing is Ishmael Kipkurui (above) from the University of New Mexico, who will lead Kenya's charge in the 10,000m and 5,000m races.

Kipkurui, who clocked the world lead time (26:50.21) of the season in the 10,000m at Sound Running's The Ten meet on March 29, will face stiff competition from fellow Kenyans and international rivals, including Eritrea's Habtom Samuel, who holds the second-fastest time (26:51.06) in the world this season.

Kipkurui expressed confidence in his preparation, but acknowledged the tough challenge ahead.

"We have a battle ahead, and it shall be a tough one. Having competed in the race on various occasions, I will be looking forward to impressing in the distance, but it depends on how my body reacts on that day," he said yesterday.

"It is really competitive because I will be up against some of the top Kenyan athletes from various schools, plus Habtom Samuel," he added.

Imola axed from 2026 F1 calendar

The 24-race Formula 1 slate for 2026 features a grand prix in Madrid replacing Italy's Emilia Romagna GP at Imola. Governing body FIA approved the calendar yesterday during a meeting of the World Motor Sport Council. The final race on Imola's current contract was last month, won by four-time reigning world champion Max Verstappen. The 2026 race in Madrid, first announced in 2024, is scheduled for September 13. The season opens in Melbourne, Australia, on March 8 and runs through December 6 at Abu Dhabi in the UAE. (Reuters)

Sunshine Development Tour - EA Swing Final round set for today

Lejirmah on course for victory at Ruiru

Kenya captain seeks strong finish and juicy top prize of Sh400,000

BY LARRY NGALA

Kenya's leading amateur golfer John Lejirmah yesterday maintained his position at the top of the leader board heading into today's third and final round of the Sunshine Development Tour - East Africa Swing second leg at the par-72 Ruiru Sports Club course.

Playing alongside lady golfer Naomi Wafula and Uganda's top professional Ronald Rugumayo, Lejirmah dropped his only shot of the day at the par-four eighth. After pushing his driver left, he chipped from off the green and narrowly missed a par putt.

Despite missing multiple birdie chances in the first seven holes, Lejirmah picked up his first birdie of the round at the ninth, which saw him make the turn at six under par.

He then capitalised on the back nine, sinking birdies at the 10th, 13th, and 18th for a three-under-par 69 and a two-round total of nine under par 135. That score gave him a commanding five-shot lead over senior pro Dismas Indiza.

"I am happy to be in this position going into the final round. I kept things tidy today by sticking to the game plan and I didn't try to force anything. I was solid off the tee and made key putts when I needed to do so. The course, on the other hand, played well and I am looking forward to a strong finish tomorrow," said Lejirmah.

Kakamega-based Indiza climbed to second place after posting a 69. He played a steady back nine with eight pars and a birdie, then started the front nine—his finishing nine—with back-to-back birdies.

He dropped a shot at the par-four fourth after missing a close putt but closed with a birdie at the par-five ninth to reach four under par 140.

"Today was a good day for me. I was able to strike the ball well as has been the case since Monday, minimising mistakes, and tomorrow is about staying patient and sharp and try to give it a final push," said Indiza.

Earlier, Kenya's Samuel Njoroge and Tanzania's Nuru Mollel both shot rounds of 69 and 70, respectively, to tie for third place at three under par 141.

Just a shot behind in fifth place was Windsor Golf Hotel and Country Club's Njoroge Kibugu, who carded his second consecutive 71 to sit at two under par 142.

Kibugu, who won the opening leg at Thika Greens Golf Resort last week, was not short of birdies—rolling in seven—but a triple bogey seven at the par-four fourth and three additional bogeys hurt his chances of challenging for the lead. However, he remains within reach of a top-three finish.

Of the six ladies who entered the tournament, only Naomi Wafula of Vipingo Ridge survived the six-over-par second-round cut.

She followed up her opening 73 with another one-over-par 73 to tie for ninth place on two over par 146 alongside Jastas Madoya, John Wangai, Eric Ooko, and Uganda's Abraham Ainamani.

Besides Lejirmah and Wafula, three other amateurs made the second-round cut: Elvis Muigua and Michael Karanga of Numburi, and Daniel Kitagu of Muthaiga.

Davis Cup serves off today in Angola

BY GEOFFREY ANENE

Kenya face Burundi today in their Pool 'B' opener of the 2025 Davis Cup Africa Group IV tie in Luanda, Angola.

Led by new captain and coach Peter Rakuom, the Kenyan lads will also battle Côte d'Ivoire and Gabon in the tough group during the four-day competition.

"It is the toughest of the two pools," Kenya coach Peter Rakuom admitted after yesterday's draw. "But we are here to compete, and our goal is clear—to advance."

The Kenyan squad features a mix of experience and youth, with Ismael Changawa and Albert Njogu leading the charge alongside Kael Shah and debutantes Raymond Riziki and Brandon Sagala.

Pool 'A' has DR Congo, Ghana, Mauritius and hosts Angola. Only the top two teams will earn promotion to Group III, with the bottom two relegated to Group V.

Rugby profile 'My long term plan is to give rugby its lost glory. Power should be with the affiliates, not the board'

Harriet Okach: I've never played rugby but I'm ready to take game to new level

Harriet Achieng Okach made history on June 5 when she was appointed new chairperson of Kenya Rugby Union, becoming the first woman to head the sports body. She replaced Sasha Mutai who resigned during a Special General Meeting that intended to table a motion of no confidence on him. AYUMBA AYODI sought to find out who the new sheriff was and her thoughts and dreams on the game whose administrative side is undergoing trying times

Q Did your appointment come as a surprise and how did it feel being a woman taking charge of what is regarded as a gentleman's game. And a game that is seemingly in turmoil?

A It was a little bit of a surprise but not much because in the brand, we got to learn about each other, our strengths and weaknesses. We were focused on unity because wrangles had created rifts. I believe fellow board members saw that it will be much easier for me to unite the board. I can crack jokes but be serious when it comes to delivery. I focus on doing what is right and what I believe in. There is no gender issue on the board. I call for leadership supersedes so many things, I was engaged in national politics but not now. I worked with Evans Kidero as his finance and campaign manager when he was elected Nairobi Governor in 2013.

Some of my friends will tell you I was a softie when Kidero engaged me because I had just returned from the United Kingdom less than two years earlier and I knew little about politics and Nairobi. I was British-polite and straight, having left the country when I was 18 years. It was baptism by fire but I managed to swim from the deep end. Politics taught me to be impartial and a good listener so that you are able to make wise decisions. That has helped me in rugby especially in the board games where there were so many accusations flying around.

People think that as I am a woman I am not supposed to be at the helm but people will be surprised with what I can achieve. I have built individual relations with everyone in the board, KRU secretariat and the clubs that is what made it easier for my appointment.

Q Who is Harriet Achieng Okach?

A I am over 40 and a mother. I am an international relations and mental health graduate from Oxford Brookes University, United Kingdom and an entrepreneur too. Away from the profession, my other interests are rugby and football. I am an alumna of Aga Khan Primary School and Kisumu and Lwak Girls, Siaya.

Q How did your rugby journey start?

A I have never played rugby in my life. I was introduced to rugby by former Kisumu mu Rugby Club chairman and patron Fidel Odinga, who wanted me to help him around 2013. I was then working at the office of the Nairobi County Governor. After Fidel died in January 2015, I was approached to stay at the club where I was a committee member before transitioning to treasurer until I resigned in 2017 due to work commitments. When I was treasurer with Gedion Kidenda as chairman, we successfully hosted the Elgon Cup in Kisumu. I wanted to be part of the decision making organ and all went well then. I contested as a KRU director during the elections in March 2023 and I got 22 votes, highest among the board members elected. So I am not someone's puppet on the board. It was a board resolution that we implement the chairman's 2024/2028 strategic plan. We were united, harmonious and decisions made at the board were decisive. Then wrangles started. Not even a committee made of eminent people comprising some past chairmen picked to mediate resolved things. Trouble broke again with many court cases being filed.

But again, we have achieved a lot. As a director of commercials, and as a team, we helped bring back the sponsors who had quit by instilling confidence in them. We have SportPesa, Tusker, Kenya Airways, Crown Paints and Safaricom's Mpesa.

Q There have been a barrage of reactions both positive and negative. Everybody seems to have a comment about you

A Coming from public relations, no news is bad news especially when you are at the helm. It depends on how you use it. It can work for and against you. For me, I have received "all the greetings" from social media with humility and gratitude. At least they all have my numbers and it will be good for communication. I will be happy to pick and answer but I won't take nonsense. I have asked God for wisdom and grace. God has been faithful. We know what we want to achieve as a board and we shall stick to the plan. Let us do it for these players and clubs.

Q Speaking of which, what are your short and long term plans for the game?

A I want to make sure the board and clubs are united. I want to listen to their issues and see how best to solve them. We are now speaking with one voice on the board. We are consulting each other more. I won't push any agenda down the throat of other members hence it will have to be a board decision. We have a plan even though Sasha Mutai, who was part of it, is no longer on the board. We shall adopt the new KRU constitution that was completed last November. It had input from the clubs, government, past chairmen and rugby legends. It has sub-unions that people are fighting about. The previous constitution gave some institutions much power.

My long term plan is to give rugby its lost glory. Power should be with the affiliates, not the board. We need more sponsors in all our leagues and national teams. Our leagues need live coverage in the mainstream media. I want the main product that we have, the players, to get what they deserve: the global stage, permanently.

I won't lie to anyone that I am technical. Everybody has their own strength but when we work in unity then we shall achieve a lot.

Q What is your take on the wrangles that had rocked the board where there were accusations of corruption, certificate forgeries and conflict of interests on service delivery?

A Investigations are going on and the Directorate of Criminal Investigations (DCI) officers have picked the cases. People need to allow for investigations to be completed. The issue on term limit was clarified which looks at our constitution vis-à-vis when the Sports Act 2013 came to play. As board members, we must be cautious in what we do and the message we send across members. Arrogance can't take us anywhere when we know that some of these clubs that have no sponsors are the ones that elected us. We must be respectful and do what is right. We the board, we the union, we the fans, we the stakeholders are not the product that the sponsors will come for but the players. If truly we love the game, let us silence the noise.

Football A new 60,000-capacity facility, Talanta Sports City Stadium is scheduled for completion in December

Winning Chan 2024 and Afcon 2027 bids a brace of goals worth bragging about

According to CAF boss Mosepe, President Ruto made a personal commitment of Kenya delivering Africa's biggest football show

BY CECIL ODONGO

Winning the rights to co-host the delayed 2024 African Nations Championship (Chan) and the 2027 Africa Cup of Nations (Afcon) tournament with Uganda and Tanzania could be considered the biggest sporting coup for administration of President William Ruto.

Kenya is currently in a race against time to prepare the requisite infrastructure to jointly host Africa's premier national football team tournament, Afcon, in 2027 with Uganda and Tanzania, as well as Chan, Africa's second-tier national team tournament reserved for footballers playing in their local leagues.

On September 27, 2023, "East Africa Pamoja bid" put together by the three East African countries surprised many by winning the hosting rights for 2027 Afcon ahead of individual bids by Senegal, Algeria, Morocco and Botswana.

Ruto was sworn in as Kenya's fifth president on September 22, 2022 and on December 6, 2022, just three months after assuming office, the Cabinet approved Kenya's joint bid with Uganda and Tanzania for 2027 Afcon.

"As a stepping stone towards the target of Harambee Stars qualifying for the Fifa World Cup 2030, the Cabinet approved the proposal to host Afcon 2027 along with East African Community partner states. The Cabinet noted that the joint bid would deploy the power of sports in furthering regional integration," a statement from the Cabinet read.

While announcing the winning bid Confederation of Africa President (CAF) Patrice Motsepe talked about the personal commitment the organisation had got from President Ruto in ensuring the project would succeed.

Securing hosting rights for 2027 Afcon was indeed a big deal considering that in 2018, Kenya lost the rights to host 2019 Chan after failing to upgrade Nyayo National al Stadium and Moi International Sports Centre, Kasarani to the required CAF standards, as well as constructing Kinoru Stadium in Meru County.

Two decades back, Kenya was also stripped of the hosting rights for the 1996 Afcon after CAF rules a lack of seriousness from the host to prepare for the tournament.

On that occasion, President Daniel Arap Moi wrote to Issa Hayatou who was president of Confederation of African Football (CAF) to say that Kenya had not done enough by way of getting ready to host the tournament. CAF moved the tournament to South Africa.

Kenya's decision to walk away from an opportunity to host the 1996 Afcon baffled observers, given that President Moi had pulled all stops nine years earlier to construct a spanking new Moi International Sports Centre, Kasarani for the 1987 All Africa Games that was hosted in Nairobi.

Observers read politics in the decision, coming four years after the introduction of multi-party politics in Kenya in 1992.

Kenya was to construct a new stadium in Mombasa for hosting the tournament.

At that time also, the chairman of Kenya Football Federation was Job Omino, who was a member of the opposition Ford Kenya party and MP for Kisumu town.

The government gave lip service to the preparations perhaps not wanting the tournament to success and all the credit go to the opposition.

After the successful bid of "East Africa Pamoja Bid", Sports Cabinet Secretary then Ababu Namwamba exuded confidence that the tournament wouldn't be taken away from Kenya over failure to provide the requisite infrastructure.

On March 1, 2023 President Ruto presided over a ground breaking ceremony for the construction of the 60,000-seater Talanta Sports City Stadium off Ngong Road, Nairobi, as part of Kenya's preparations to co-host 2027 Afcon.

It was the first time Kenya was constructing a major stadium from scratch after MISC, Kasarani that was inaugurated in 1987. The Talanta stadium is scheduled for completion in December this year at a cost of Sh44.7 billion.

Together with Nyayo Stadium, they are the sports legacy of President Moi's regime.

"We expect that by 2025 we shall be in place where most of the targets we have set will be complete," Namwamba observed on July 26, 2023 after meeting CAF inspectors.

To help them adequately test their facilities and prepare to host 2027 Afcon, and in conformity to CAF's regulations regarding hosting of the continental championships, Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania were awarded hosting rights for the 2024 Chan.

The tournament, originally slated for September last year, was postponed to February this year, and again to August 2025 owing to inadequate preparations.

Kenya and indeed her co-hosts Uganda and Tanzania are racing against time to deliver MISC as the main venue, with Nyayo National Stadium, Ilmorog Sports Complex (all in Nairobi County), Kirigiti Stadium (Kiambu County), and Police Sacco Stadium (South 'C' in Nairobi) as training venues.

On May 27, CAF Secretary Veron Mosengo-Omba said Kenya had made good progress in its preparation and just a few finer touches were needed.

The CAF official said Kenya could only be sure of hosting the continental showpiece if it maintained the current pace of preparations.

"I came here in December and there was no grass on different pitches but today, you can even play golf there. This shows that a huge progress has been made since then, and even Nyayo National Stadium has hosted two matches," a tough-talking Veron observed.

"Then, there were some seats at Kasarani, but now there are full seats. However, there are some aspects which must be completed before we can say Kenya can host the game," the Cameroonian added.

Sports Cabinet Secretary Salim Mvurya said Kenya will maintain the pace of preparations, adding that MISC is ready, complete with irrigation channels. He said seats have been fixed at the stadium, the main canopy fixed, and work on the VVIP area, changing rooms, and media tribune completed.

"What we are doing is fixing VAR and other electronic things. We will ensure Kenya hosts this tournament," said Mvurya.

The CS added that the contractor working at MISC was paid Sh400 million on June 3 to ensure all pending work is completed.

The government has indicated that both tournaments must be held and held successfully.

If and when that comes to pass, it will give President William Ruto's regime the huge bragging rights of hosting Africa's two biggest international football tournaments, and juts two years apart. This has never happened in the country before.

Mother and son who were high school classmates

BY ELVIS ONDIEKI

The iconic Kapsara Secondary School in Trans Nzoia County witnessed a rare spectacle in the early 2010s.

Damaris Kimani had sat her Kenya Certificate of Primary Education examination at an advanced age and passed enough to gain admission to the school, which is 23 kilometres away from Kitale by road.

She was way older than the other Form Ones who joined in her year. What's more, she was a mother of four children by the time of her admission. Her ambition to discover how far education would take her, and to find out why it was called the "key", kept her going.

When Damaris was in Form Two, her second-born, Webster, joined the same institution in Form One. For the next three years, mother and son were schoolmates.

There were funny moments, like when the son would rush to his mother's class to borrow a pen. Webster knew this would crack up the class, and he confesses that he sometimes did this for the fun of it. He could even go to his mother to demand a gift when she came from an outing, to the amusement of other schoolmates.

By the time Damaris sat her Kenya Certificate of Secondary Education examinations in 2011, she was a boarder at Kapsara, as was her son. Damaris' husband, Samuel, would be left at home to take care of their lastborn, a pre-primary school girl then. He was ridiculed. Told to remarry. Questioned about the wisdom behind all this. But he defied the critics.

Thanks to Samuel's resolve, his wife is today a government-employed secondary school teacher, having graduated from Masinde Muliro University of Science and Technology (MMUST) in 2016.

"He (her husband) has made me who I am, and he has stood with me and the entire family despite the challenges, despite many accusations and derogatory words spoken out there by society," says Damaris.

Nation Lifestyle recently had an interview with Webster, who cracked up the online community earlier this year when he shared the story on Facebook.

Getting Webster for an interview is a lesson in patience, as he is always a man on the move. He is an international traveller in the making.

We had to wait two months for him to finish a tour of East Africa before he came roaring to the Nation Centre on his Tekken 250 Pro superbike with a camera. He was shooting content while in the Nation Centre, giving a blow-by-blow account of his visit to his viewers. Quintessential YouTube content creator.

We asked him what he learnt from his experience at Kapsara with his mother.

"The first lesson is that you always have to go out of your way to achieve your dreams. It doesn't matter what other people think; it doesn't matter what you go through. You are the one who is responsible for your dreams and achieving them," he said.

"When we were studying with my mother at the same school, people said a lot of things. They discouraged us, especially her. You know, some people said she wouldn't make it. They said she's too old to understand anything. We came from a village; a proper village setup [in Trans Nzoia County]. We cook with firewood. Some folks used to say that she's cooked with firewood, and so smoke has gone to her head; she wouldn't understand anything. But all this didn't stop her. So, for me, the lesson is determination and ignoring all the outside factors just to focus on what you want to achieve," added Webster.

Damaris was top of her class from Form One through Form Four, eventually earning admission to MMUST. Webston recalls that his mother was never given special treatment.

“She was a student like any other,” he said.

“She would follow school rules. For instance, students were supposed to shave their hair. She had shaved all her hair. They were also supposed to dress in full school uniform. They were supposed to run. There was that rule that you don’t walk; you run. She would run. I remember one time she was punished in school. She forgot to write her admission number in an exam and she was punished. Not caned, but she was asked to write her admission number 300 times,” said Webston.

Now teaching history and CRE at a school close to the Saiwa Swamp National Park, Damaris says her story has inspired many girls to pursue an education even at a relatively advanced age.

She said she had quit schooling to become a mother because of her background.

“I come from a polygamous family. My mother died while I was very young, at the age of five. Imagine the challenges of growing in a polygamous family and your mum is not there. That is how I found myself in the situation,” Damaris told Nation Lifestyle. “I was the last born from my mother’s lineage.”

In a video that Webston uploaded on his YouTube channel (The Time Master KE) last year, Damaris said she chose to go to school after a challenge from her husband, who is a farmer.

“There was one time we went to plant trees. And as we were planting trees (my husband) said that that is his retirement benefit. “Then I asked him, ‘What about me?’ Then he told me, ‘Go back to school,’” she recalled.

She accepted the challenge and enrolled for KCPE, though she and her husband chose not to inform their children.

“They were not aware. They did not know what we were doing,” said Damaris.

That is why Webston and his siblings were taken away to see their mother in uniform, heading to Kapsara.

“I had the passion to be in school like any other person and be able to achieve my goal in life. You see, I was asking myself, ‘How is this education a key to life?’ You know, during those times, the children would recite poems saying that education is the key to life. I was also like ‘I should get this key to open this door to life,’” said Damaris.

In university, she remembers being an encouragement to other students.

“I encouraged them, they would work hard as they saw that I was also working hard,” she said.

In the YouTube video, Webston asked his father to share the challenges he faced during the period when he and his mother were away in school.

“The biggest challenge was the school fees, because you know I’m not employed by any company or the government. So, I used to struggle here, farming. By then, there was no scholarship throughout. That was the biggest problem. Another challenge is that now I was the only breadwinner. Before that, we used to do the farming with [Damaris]. But now, she was in school as a student,” said Samuel.

He recalled another challenge — taking care of their youngest daughter.

“I used to stay with the girl, take care of her, wash her, wash her clothes, cook for her, and others. Another challenge was the community. You know, they were challenging me. They were telling me, ‘What are you doing? Are you crazy? You are taking your wife to school? This is crazy. This has never happened.’ They had never seen that. So, they were telling me, ‘You are wasting your money because your wife will not make it; she is old,’” the father said.

“Some other people in the church were challenging me. Some were telling me, ‘You should marry another wife because your wife has gone. She will not come back when she has finished her education.’ But I could not do that because it is against our beliefs,” he added.

Webston describes his father, who was schooled up to Form Six, as a sturdy record-keeper who would meticulously inspect their report forms.

“We used to take [report forms] to my dad. You know, my dad was very strict in academics, very strict in education. And forget even about the report card; my dad would see individual papers. He wants the papers. You know, history, he wants to see the paper, you know, all of them,” Webston told Nation Lifestyle.

“He’s a records person,” he added. “He keeps things well. At some point, we used his books that he used when he was doing O Level.”

Webston had a thank-you message for his parents: “They should just know we are proud of them.

Diaper prices rise, parents get creative

BY ESTHER INTABO

Diaper prices have steadily increased over the past five years in Kenya, catching many new and seasoned parents off guard. What used to be a manageable monthly expense is now eating into household budgets, prompting some families to adjust their parenting strategies.

From switching to more affordable brands and using washable nappies to early potty training, parents are discovering inventive ways to manage.

And if the past few years are anything to go by, this basic commodity may soon turn into a luxury item—unless change comes from the top.

According to a spot check done by Nation Lifestyle, a newborn uses eight to 10 diapers in a day. That is roughly 300 diapers a month. For most middle families, that translates to at least two to three packs per month.

“Currently, I am spending Sh5,500 every month on diapers alone for my 5-month-old. I use an average of seven diapers in a day,” says Faith Wainaina, an entrepreneur mother from Thika. “And I am not even using the high end brands. I go with what I can afford in the market as long as it is not harming my child.”

Faith has tried switching to cheaper brands but was not impressed. “Some leak, others have a funny smell. So I end up going back to the mid-range options. Comfort and rash protection are worth paying for, but it has not been easy.”

Sometimes, Faith finds herself scrutinising her shopping list and wondering what to sacrifice for the sake of diapers. “It is not just about the money. There is some guilt, too. When you can’t afford your baby’s basic needs, it eats at you.”

Often, Faith makes a trip to Eastleigh and Gikomba markets in Nairobi to shop for diapers in bulk at a more affordable price.

“I get to Gikomba very early in the morning, the baby tied to my back. It is quite chaotic, but it saves me a few thousands each month.”

When Judy Mutinda had her second baby in 2024, she thought she had mastered the art of diaper shopping. After all, she had raised her first child, who was now seven years old. Nothing prepared her for the shock that awaited her the moment she walked into the supermarket to get some diapers.

“Back in 2017, I would spend around Sh1,200 for a decent pack of 60 diapers. Now, the same pack goes for more than Sh2,000. I thought maybe it was the brand, but even the cheaper ones have gone up,” says the 33-year-old mother of two from Kitui.

She decided to use washable diapers and only buys a few disposable ones for when she is going out with the baby. The reusable diapers are easily available in thrift shops and cost Sh300 to Sh500 a piece. They can last up to seven months, depending on how they are used.

“They require lots of washing, but they save money in the long run. I started potty training my son at one and a half years old. I had hoped to wait until he was at least two, but diapers were eating up all my money, especially here in the rural area.” With the rising costs of diapers, brand loyalty has taken a back seat. Mothers are now more open to trying out cheaper alternatives.

“I used to buy Pampers Premium,” says Teresa Nyabuto, a mother of four in Kisii. “But now I am mixing it up. I use the premium ones at night and cheaper brands during the day when I can change them frequently.”

Like Judy, potty training helped her cut the cost of diapers when her baby turned 15 months old.

“I got tired of budgeting for diapers every month. I couldn’t afford it anymore. I bought a potty for Sh500, and we trained my daughter at 15 months in just a month.”

Our spot check further revealed that most parents are potty training their babies at the age of 15 to 20 months, compared to the traditional 24 to 30 months. The potty training seats have also become more accessible in baby shops and supermarkets. They came in fun designs, some even resembling toilets to make the transition to the regular toilet much easier for toddlers.

Pricing diapers

So, why have diaper prices gone up?

To understand this, we delved into what informs the pricing of this commodity.

There are diaper sizes for newborns, small, medium, large and extra-large. The diaper sizes can vary slightly depending on the brand. The larger the size, the fewer the pieces per pack and the more you pay for less.

In 2020, a popular mid-range diaper pack went for about Sh1,300 to Sh1,600. In 2022, prices began rising. By 2024, a combination of global inflation, increased import costs, and currency depreciation had sent prices soaring by more than 30 per cent.

A jumbo pack of diapers cost, on average, Sh1,300 in 2020. Although inflation had not hit as hard at the time, Kenya was still getting over the economic setback caused by the COVID-19 outbreak. The cost of importing nappies increased between 2021 and 2023 due to several global variables, including a decline in the value of the Kenyan shilling, shipping delays, and rising raw material costs. Consequently, retailers passed this cost to customers.

“Even brands manufactured or assembled locally have not been spared,” says Simon Karanja, a diaper seller based in Kamukunji, Nairobi. “Costs of packaging, production, and distribution have gone up.”

Import restrictions have also increased brand rivalry, which has reduced pricing pressure. A year ago, Karanja says packaging papers for diapers cost him Sh2,000. Currently, he purchases them at Sh2,700.

“Most of my customers ask for the affordable diapers. I cannot afford to stock expensive diapers, which will be dead stock,” he says and adds,

“If there were a way to produce affordable, quality diapers locally, it would change everything. Diaper prices are changing every two months.”

She cheated and got pregnant, do I stop the marriage plans?

Hello, I have a partner; we've been together for over three years. We're in the process of notifying both sides of the family about our plans to get married. The problem is that she cheated on me about three months ago and became pregnant. We were meant to visit her home in August. I feel hurt and offended, especially since starting another relationship isn't easy. What can one do in such a situation?

Dear reader,

This woman didn't cheat on you. She showed you her

I believe that a woman's most important qualities are her morals, not her physical appearance. It's her mentality, not her sexuality that will make or break your home.

Sexuality is important. But if it's not fenced and safeguarded by sound principles and a chaste lifestyle, what good is it?

This is what I mean: if she can sleep with you before marriage, how do you know that you're the only one she can do that with?

Even if you found her a virgin, you still have a lingering doubt whether or she won't give it to many other men.

This is the dilemma: you want a woman who is sexually enthusiastic or one who is drawn to you sexually. You don't want to feel like you're unwanted every time you get intimate. This may be the reason you're trying out sex with her before marriage.

On the other hand, you also want a loyal woman. One who will be true to you behind your back. One who has done the nearly impossible task of taming her sexual impulses.

People underestimate the sexual temptations women go through, and that's why they gloss over this issue. There's an assumption that men have more sexual energy and drive than women. That's a lie. Women and men have the same level of sexual desires and needs.

Variations exist from person to person, but the genders are the same. It's a dangerous assumption to think that a woman is just waiting for you to satisfy you.

She also has her timeline and dynamics.

That said, we move to the next part of the problem - that she's pregnant with another man.

You should never get married when your partner is pregnant, even if you're the one behind it.

Relationships
Benjamin Zulu

Pregnancy is a different journey with lots of emotions and hormonal changes.

To make a decision as permanent as a marriage while also going through the physiological and psychological changes of pregnancy is the most imprudent thing a woman can do.

Socially, her identity is changing into that of a mother. Physically, her body is changing, and her priorities on looks are changing for the next year or so.

Financially, some planning and preparation are needed.

There's also anxiety about what type of child will come forth, whether they will be healthy and if the delivery itself will be smooth.

With all these things going on in her life, would you also want to burden her with another decision as heavy as getting married?

She may marry you as an escape, but not a mindful choice. That's history that will haunt your marriage.

Lastly, what to do about the plans already underway? Halt everything. Postpone any home visits; you don't have to expose her unnecessarily. Just say that the woman is expecting, and you prefer to resume plans after she gives birth to her baby.

Afterwards, you can move like Joseph of old, who purposed to leave Mary secretly rather than making her a public spectacle.

Entlemen are always mindful of their exit. Even when they've been wronged and let down, they don't wield their power unnecessarily. They're humane and considerate. This becomes their permanent legacy: they were justifiably angry, but still, they were not vengeful.

Breakups are always unsettling and disorienting. You're losing something you were deeply invested in. But I think you should take it with equanimity when you consider that you're being spared a worse hell of divorce or living with a disloyal woman.

After you walk away with finality, use the lessons from this experience to improve your future dating experiences.

Do not open the portal of premarital sex. You'll be lowering the bar too much because any woman can give you sex. Instead, set the standard by focusing on character analysis and creating a deeper bond.

When you're not sleeping with someone, your judgment remains very sharp, and you can see if they're living a double life behind your back.

Surprisingly, when you don't compromise sexually, the wrong women will usually flee on their own. Either they feel challenged and judged by your standards, or they're unable to match them.

That's how discipline saves you from the disaster of a bad marriage.

What counts as matrimonial property?

I bought a piece of land two years after getting married. Is this matrimonial property? I didn't think it was important to tell my husband.

Hi, Concerned Spouse,

Property ownership is not a restricted right, nor does it impose conditions on individuals seeking to own property beyond those established by law. According to Article 40, Clause 1, paragraphs (a) and (b) of the Constitution of Kenya, every person, whether acting individually or in partnership with others, has the right to acquire and own property of any kind in any part of Kenya. This right is only limited by the provisions of Article 65, which outlines the conditions under which foreigners may hold land in Kenya. Therefore, individuals have the legal right to purchase and own property without any obligation to inform others about the acquisition and ownership of that property.

Matrimonial property should be understood in the context of marriage as a larger institution. To determine whether a property falls under the ownership of couples in matrimony, it is essential to first establish the existence of legal records that document and confirm the marriage. Section 3 of the Marriage Act and the Marriage Customary Rules of 2017 serve as the governing law underpinning Article 45 of the Constitution, which defines marriage. Additionally, Sections 17 to 49 of the Act outline the five types of marriage recognised in Kenya, where the possibility of polygamy is restricted to customary and Islamic unions.

In a marriage, as stated in Article 45 of the Constitution and reiterated in Section 3(2) of the Marriage Act, both parties have equal rights at the time of marriage, during the marriage, and at the time of its dissolution. In this regard, husbands and wives must be treated equally by the law, as mandated by Article 27(1) of the Constitution. Consequently, matrimonial property is defined in the context of ownership by spouses within a marriage.

Legal Clinic

What qualifies as matrimonial property? Section 6 of the Matrimonial Property Act of 2013 outlines this. It includes the matrimonial home or homes, household goods and effects that are part of the matrimonial homes, and any other movable or immovable property that is jointly owned and acquired during the marriage. Based on this definition, it is clear that the property in question does not qualify as matrimonial property.

At what point does property that is not jointly owned become contentious enough for one spouse to seek its designation as matrimonial property? This typically occurs when a dispute arises concerning divorce, separation, or property ownership between spouses. According to Section 7 of the Matrimonial Property Act, ownership of matrimonial property, in the absence of a functional prenuptial agreement (as outlined in Section 6(3)), is determined by the contribution of each spouse towards its acquisition. In the event of a divorce or dissolution of the marriage, this property shall be divided between the spouses. If one is part of a polygamous marriage, then Section 8 of the Matrimonial Property Act applies to help address property-related issues.

The law addresses the situation in which your husband may claim ownership of the land you purchased without his knowledge and presumptively his financial contribution. Section 9 of the Matrimonial Property Act outlines the rights related to beneficial interest. It states that when one spouse acquires property before or during the marriage, that property does not automatically become marital property. However, if the other spouse contributes to the improvement of the property, they acquire a beneficial interest in it that corresponds to the value of their contribution. According to Section 2 of the Matrimonial Property Act, contributions can be both monetary and non-monetary. Non-monetary contributions include domestic work, childcare, companionship, management of the marital home, and involvement in the family business. It may also encompass support in accessing financial resources, such as loan guarantees, especially when using a spousal pay slip to enhance the credibility of the applicant.

The courts in Kenya have examined this matter thoroughly on several occasions. In the case of PNN v. ZWN (2017), the Court of Appeal stated that the framers of Article 45(3) of the Constitution did not intend for parties in a marriage to divide matrimonial property equally on a 50/50 basis. Instead, the Court noted that the term "equal rights" implies that each party's share of the property should depend on the extent of their contributions. Interpreting this to mean an absolute 50/50 division would unnecessarily limit the rights described in Article 40 of the Constitution beyond what is stipulated in Article 65.

Parenting

Be kind to your andropausal spouse

Andropause is a subtle condition, not as dramatic as menopause. Have you reached 50? Perhaps you need to stop believing that you are still 30, because andropause will gently tap you on the shoulder. When you turn to look, you will discover that your wife is a tad disgruntled because conjugal rights have become as infrequent as a flu vaccine, which is a polite way to say, "never happens."

Wife Speak
Karimi Gatimi

Libido becomes a matter of a willing spirit, but the flesh needs an appointment, a nap, and maybe some medical assistance. Andropause will show you things worse than those the KRA agents have shown our hustling businesses. You will roll up your sleeves for serious business, but that officer will refuse to cooperate. I am not talking about taxes or manufacturing. "Sir, your youth has expired." Your officer will remind you, for your testosterone has been declining since the day you celebrated your thirtieth birthday. But he is a gentleman, your testosterone. It allowed you every possible misadventure, but in one day, andropause, like a fed-up wife, screams, "Enough is enough! The ten-year guarantee has expired."

Andropause has wreaked havoc on unsuspecting men—and women—out here. Unlike menopause, which receives its fair share of sympathy, documentaries, and herbal teas, andropause lurks in the shadows like a poorly kept secret. But it is real, it is hormonal, and it does not care if you do ten thousand steps daily or lift weights. Testosterone levels drop, and suddenly, life hits differently. How do you know when a man is under assault by andropause? I posed this question in a group, and more than half the guys caught feelings.

"There's nothing like male menopause. We grind until we're six feet under," Joel Musyoka, 47, smirked. "Our factories don't close."

Vanity is an obvious symptom of andropause. As testosterone retreats like a shy guest at a party, men attempt to trap it with expensive colognes and tight jeans that have not fitted since Moi was president. It is somewhat comical to watch a 52-year-old with a receding hairline and reading glasses perched on his head, saying, "I still feel like I'm 30." Sir, you may feel 30, but your knees disagree. Loudly. It is not merely a midlife crisis but andropause whispering, "You're not young, but maybe you can look like it... from the right angle, in dim light." The next time you see a middle-aged chap in a Mini Cooper with a suspension too low for his back to endure, whisper a prayer: Andropause is unforgiving. It makes a man say, "I still have it." No one really knows what 'it' is, but often, his wife rolls her eyes when she hears this.

A man going through andropause will sleep for a complete eight hours but wake up feeling like a Maasai Moran fresh from a lion hunt; bone tired. Even getting out of bed is a whole musical ceremony, with cracks and creaks from your joints as you negotiate with gravity. You forget your middle child's name, and when you bump into her teacher, you stare at them and ask, "You look familiar... how did we meet?" You blame your brain on information overload, not realising your hormones are playing hide and seek with you.

A man experiencing andropause is moodier than his teenage daughter and wife combined during their onslaught of PMS (Pre-menstrual Syndrome). However, andropause lasts longer and can make him grumpy if the remote is not within his immediate reach. One minute, he is eager to fix the leaking tap; the next, he is angry because the tap reminds him of his recently overactive bladder.

Hair takes a toll on andropausal men and menopausal women. It sheds where we want it full and grows in the strangest places: ears, nose, shoulders. Yet men, being vain, still pay an arm and a leg at the barber's. As the barbers are savvy businesspeople, they now offer head massages to justify the one hour they keep a bald man in their shop.

Now, ladies, if you are living with a man in andropause, please be kind. One part of him wishes to age gracefully, while the other desires to dye his beard and dress like a Gen Z. He is experiencing an identity crisis. He is wondering whether he should finally start that avocado farm in Isinya.

Gentlemen? Andropause is simply a rerouting. You have gained wisdom, perspective, and a refined appreciation for naps.

When did you last check up on your bro?

When it comes to men's mental health, a topic that's hardly ever spoken about is that of wellness men-to-men checks. I define these types of checks as unprompted calls a man makes when he deduces or discerns that another brother is in distress. The said brother may not have sent a formal SOS, but some alarm bells rang inside his helper's spirit, which caused him to spring into action.

Got it? Good. Let's make this topic make sense.

Just listen

As men, we have been conditioned to kaa ngumu, even if we are seated, butt-naked, on a live wire. This idea of manning up is the silent killer of many men.

It's because of this inherent internal configuration, which compels us to kaa ngumu, that we can't tell fellow men we need a wellness check.

However, we still send subtle messages. Which, by and large, are ignored or unheard. For instance, we may go missing from our social places. Or, even in these social places, we may become silent.

Men aren't complex creatures. We aren't hard to figure out. Just listen. Listen intently. When you do that, you will pick up the SOS frequency, which will lead you to do a wellness check.

Just call the man

I've realised that, if I have an un-

Just a Man
Josaya Wasonga

ceasing ringing in my spirit to call a brother, I should never ignore that voice. Neither should I shush it. I have realised that these are prodding to make a wellness check on a brother in distress.

You know what? Each time I've called, I've been met by the same response from the other end: "Bro, how did you know? This is just what I needed."

Which is why I counsel brothers, "Just call the man".

Just do it

Sometimes a wellness check involves saying less and listening more. Other times it involves just sitting in solitude with a brother and letting your souls commune.

A wellness check can involve watching a game of footie together. Or breaking bread. Or sharing drinks. It can involve building each other's inner man through the word of God.

Whatever you're led to do, just do it. It may not seem like much, but, believe it, can be the very thing that saves a soul.

Just initiate the call

Sometimes a wellness check will compel us to take certain courses of action. There are issues that need more than words of encouragement. Some situations call for tough decisions. Decisions like seeking professional help. Or referring a brother to someone who may ably walk with him.

Initiate that tough call. Don't wait for someone else to do it. Don't wait for a better time. After you have taken the initiative, walk with the brother as he takes the next steps, which will lead him to a better version of himself.

Just participate

Iron sharpens iron. Which means that, without the tough edge of other men, a man will be blunt, rusty and ineffective.

For a man to cut it - (pun intended) - it behoves other men to participate in communal welfare checks. In such calls, men come with their gifts and talents, however miniscule or humongous, and pour into not only the vessels that are in need - but in all and sundry.

When men pour into each other, regardless of socioeconomic statuses, we all, corporately and individually, become better men. And the ripples are felt in all the spaces we frequent.

Makes sense? Perfect. Now, make it work. And while we're at it, let's make every month men's mental health month.
